Sec. 701. Accumulation Trusts.

(a) Revision of Method of Taxing Accumulation Distribution From Trusts.—

(1) Section 667 (relating to denial of refund to trusts; authorization of credit to beneficiaries) is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 667. Treatment of Amounts Deemed Distributed by Trust in Preceding Years.

"(a) General Rule.—The total of the amounts which are treated under section 666 as having been distributed by a trust in a preceding taxable year shall be included in the income of a beneficiary of the trust when paid, credited, or required to be distributed to the extent that such total would have been included in the income of such beneficiary under section 662(a)(2) (and, with respect to any tax-exempt interest to which section 103 applies, under section 662(b)) if such total had been paid to such beneficiary on the last day of such preceding taxable year. The tax imposed by this subtitle on a beneficiary for a taxable year in which any such amount is included in his income shall be determined only as provided in this section and shall consist of the sum of—

"(1) a partial tax computed on the taxable income reduced by an amount equal to the total of such amounts, at the rate and in the manner as if this section had not been enacted, and

"(2) a partial tax determined as provided in subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) Tax on Distribution.—

"(1) In general.—The partial tax imposed by subsection (a)(2) shall be determined—

"(A) by determining the number of preceding taxable years of the trust on the last day of which an amount is deemed under section 666(a) to have been distributed,

"(B) by taking from the 5 taxable years immediately preceding the year of the accumulation distribution the 1 taxable year for which the beneficiary's taxable income was the highest and the 1 taxable year for which his taxable income was the lowest,

"(C) by adding to the beneficiary's taxable income for each of the 3 taxable years remaining after the application of subparagraph (B) an amount determined by dividing the amount deemed distributed under section 666 and required to be included in income under subsection (a) by the number of preceding taxable years determined under subparagraph (A), and

"(D) by determining the average increase in tax for the 3 taxable years referred to in subparagraph (C) resulting from the application of such subparagraph.

The partial tax imposed by subsection (a)(2) shall be the excess (if any) of the average increase in tax determined under subparagraph (D), multiplied by the number of preceding taxable years determined under subparagraph (A), over the amount of taxes deemed distributed to the beneficiary under sections 666 (b) and (c).

"(2) Treatment of loss years.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the taxable income of the beneficiary for any taxable year shall be deemed not to be less than zero.

"(3) Certain preceding taxable years not taken into account.—For purposes of paragraph (1), if the amount of the undistributed net income deemed distributed in any preceding taxable year of the trust is less than 25 percent of the amount of the accumulation distribution divided by the number of preceding taxable years to which the accumulation distribution is allocated under section 666(a), the number of preceding taxable years of the trust with respect to which an amount is deemed distributed to a beneficiary under section 666(a) shall be determined without regard to such year.

"(4) Effect of other accumulation distributions.—In computing the partial tax under paragraph (1) for any beneficiary, the income of such beneficiary for each of his prior taxable years shall include amounts previously deemed distributed to such beneficiary in such year under section 666 as a result of prior accumulation distributions (whether from the same or another trust).

"(5) Multiple distributions in the same taxable year.—In the case of accumulation distributions made from more than one trust which are includible in the income of a beneficiary in the same taxable year, the distributions shall be deemed to have been made consecutively in whichever order the beneficiary shall determine.

"(c) Special Rule for Multiple Trusts.—

"(1) In general.—If, in the same prior taxable year of the beneficiary in which any part of the accumulation distribution from a trust (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as 'third trust') is deemed under section 666(a) to have been distributed to such beneficiary, some part of prior distributions by each of 2 or more other trusts is deemed under section 666(a) to have been distributed to such beneficiary, then subsections (b) and (c) of section 666 shall not apply with respect to such part of the accumulation distribution from such third trust.

"(2) Accumulation distributions from trust not taken into account unless they equal or exceed $1,000.—For purposes of paragraph (1), an accumulation distribution from a trust to a beneficiary shall be taken into account only if such distribution, when added to any prior accumulation distributions from such trust which are deemed under section 666(a) to have been distributed to such beneficiary for the same prior taxable year of the beneficiary, equals or exceeds $1,000."

(2) Section 666 (relating to accumulation distribution allocated to preceding years) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Denial of Refund to Trusts and Beneficiaries.—No refund or credit shall be allowed to a trust or a beneficiary of such trust for any preceding taxable year by reason of a distribution deemed to have been made by such trust in such year under this section."

(c) No Accumulation Distribution Where Distributions Do Not Exceed Accounting Income.—Section 665(b) (defining accumulation distribution), as amended by subsection (b), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If the amounts properly paid, credited, or required to be distributed by the trust for the taxable year do not exceed the income of the trust for such year, there shall be no accumulation distribution for such year."

"(B) the application for such a determination is filed with the Secretary not later than 90 days after the date on which the claim is made for credit under section 38, and

"(C) the contribution is returned within one year after the date on which the Secretary issues notice to the employer that such plan does not satisfy the requirements of this subsection, subsection (e), or section 401(a) of such Code."

(d) Plan Requirements for Taxpayers Electing Additional One-Half Percent Credit.—Section 301 of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 (relating to increase in investment credit) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections.

"(e) Plan Requirements for Taxpayers Electing Additional One-Half Percent Credit.—

"(1) General rule.—For purposes of clause (ii) of section 46 (a)(2)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the amount determined under this subsection for a taxable year is an amount equal to the sum of the matching employee contributions for the taxable year which meet the requirements of this subsection.

"(2) Election; basic plan requirement.—No amount shall be determined under this subsection for the taxable year unless the corporation elects to have this subsection apply for that year. A corporation may not elect to have the provisions of this subsection apply for a taxable year unless the corporation meets the requirements of subsection (d) and the requirements of this subsection.

"(3) Employer contribution.—On making a claim for credit, adjustment, or refund under section 38 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the employer shall state in such claims that the employer agrees, as a condition of receiving any such credit, adjustment, or refund attributable to the provisions of section 46(a)(2)(B)(ii) of such Code, to transfer employer securities (as defined in subsection (d)(9)(A)) to the plan having an aggregate value at the time of the transfer of not more than one-half of one percent of the amount of the qualified investment (as determined under subsections (c) and (d) of section 46 of such Code) of the taxpayer for the taxable year. For purposes of meeting the requirements of this paragraph, a transfer of cash shall be treated as a transfer of employer securities if the cash is, under the plan, used to purchase employer securities.

"(4) Requirements relating to matching employee contributions.—

"(A) An amount contributed by an employee under a plan described in subsection (d) for the taxable year may not be treated as a matching employee contribution for that taxable year under this subsection unless—

"(i) each employee who participates in the plan described in subsection (d) is entitled to make such a contribution,

"(ii) the contribution is designated by the employee as a contribution intended to be used for matching employer amounts transferred under paragraph (3) to a plan which meets the requirements of this subsection, and

"(iii) the contribution is in the form of an amount paid in cash to the employer or plan administrator not later than 24 months after the close of the taxable year in which the portion of the credit allowed by section 38 of such Code (and determined under clause (ii) of section 46(a)(2)(B) of such Code which the contribution is to match) is allowed, and is invested forthwith in employer securities (as defined in subsection (d)(9)(A)).

"(B) The sum of the amounts of matching employee contributions taken into account for purposes of this subsection for any taxable year may not exceed the value (at the time of transfer) of the employer securities transferred to the plan in accordance with the requirements of paragraph (3) for the year for which the employee contributions are designated as matching contributions.

"(C) The employer may not make participation in the plan a condition of employment and the plan may not require matching employer contributions as a condition of participation in the plan.

"(D) Employee contributions under the plan must meet the requirements of section 401(a)(4) (relating to contributions).

"(5) A plan must provide for allocation of all employer securities transferred to it or purchased by it under this subsection to the account of each participant (who was a participant at any time during the plan year, whether or not he is a participant at the close of the plan year) as of the close of the plan year in an amount equal to his matching employee contributions for the year. Matching employee contributions and amount so allocated shall be deemed to be allocated under subsection (d)(3).

"(f) Recapture.—

"(1) General rule.—Amounts transferred to a plan under subsection (d)(6) or (e)(3) may be withdrawn from the plan by the employer if the plan provides that while subject to recapture—

"(A) amounts so transferred with respect to a taxable year are segregated from other plan assets, and

"(B) separate accounts are maintained for participants on whose behalf amounts so transferred have been allocated for a taxable year.

"(2) Coordination with other law.—Notwithstanding any other law or rule of law, an amount withdrawn by the employer will neither fail to be considered to be nonforfeitable nor fail to be for the exclusive benefit of participants or their beneficiaries merely because of the withdrawal from the plan of—

"(A) amounts described in paragraph (1), or

"(B) employer amounts transferred under subsection (e)(3) to the plan which are not matched by matching employee contributions or which are in excess of the limitations of section 415 of such Code, nor will the withdrawal of any such amount be considered to violate the provisions of section 403(c)(1) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974."

(e) Clerical Amendment.—

(1) The heading of section 301(d) of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 is amended by striking out "11-Percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "Additional".

(2) Section 301(d) of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 is amended by—

(A) striking out "A corporation" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as expressly provided in subsections (e) and (f), a corporation",

(B) inserting "or subsection (e)(3)" in paragraph (7)(A) immediately after "(6)",

(C) striking out "this subsection" in paragraph (10) and substituting in lieu thereof "this subsection and subsections (e) and (f)", and

(D) striking out "this subsection" each time it appears in paragraph (11) and substituting in lieu thereof "this subsection or subsection (e) or (f)".

(f) Limitations on Contributions.—

(1) Special limitation for employee stock ownership plans.—Section 415(c) (relating to limitation for defined contribution plans) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) Special limitation for employee stock ownership plan.—

"(A) In the case of an employee stock ownership plan (as defined in subparagraph (B), under which no more than one-third of the employer contributions for a year are allocated to the group of employees consisting of officers, shareholders owning more than 10 percent of the employer's stock (determined under subparagraph (B)(iv)), or employees described in subparagraph (B)(iii), the amount described in subsection (c)(1)(A) (as adjusted for such year pursuant to subsection (d)(1)) for a year with respect to any participant shall be equal to the sum of (i) the amount described in subsection (c)(1)(A) (as so adjusted) determined without regard to this paragraph and (ii) the lesser of the amount determined under clause (i) or the amount of employer securities contributed to the employee stock ownership plan.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) the term 'employee stock ownership plan' means a plan which meets the requirements of section 4975(e)(7) or section 301 (d) of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975,

"(ii) the term 'employer securities' means, in the case of an employee stock ownership plan within the meaning of section 4975(e)(7), qualifying employer securities within the meaning of section 4975(e)(8), but only if they are described in section 301(d)(9)(A) of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975, or, in the case of an employee stock ownership plan described in section 301(d)(2) of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975, employer securities within the meaning of section 301(d)(9)(A) of such Act,

"(iii) an employee described in this clause is any participant whose compensation for a year exceeds an amount equal to twice the amount described in subsection (c)(1)(A) for such year (as adjusted for such year pursuant to subsection (d)(1)), determined without regard to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, and

"(iv) an individual shall be considered to own more than 10 percent of the employer's stock if, without regard to stock held under the employee stock ownership plan, he owns (after application of section 1563(e)) more than 10 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote or more than 10 percent of the total value of shares of all classes of stock.".

(2) Conforming amendment.—Paragraph (3)(B) of section 415(e) (relating to defined contribution plan fraction) is amended by inserting "determined without regard to paragraph (6) of such subsection)" after "employer".

(g) Waiver of Penalty for Underpayment of Estimated Tax.—If

(1) a corporation made underpayments of estimated tax for a taxable year of the corporation which includes August 1, 1975, because the corporation intended to elect to have the provisions of subparagraph (B) of section 46(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as it existed before the date of enactment of this Act) apply for such taxable year, and

(2) the corporation does not elect to have the provisions of such subparagraph apply for such taxable year because this Act does not contain the amendments made by section 804(a)(2) (relating to flowthrough of investment credit), or the provisions of subsection (f) of such section (relating to grace period for certain plan transfers), of the bill H.R. 10612 (94th Congress, 2d Session), as amended by the Senate, then the provisions of section 6655 of such Code (relating to failure by corporation to pay estimated income tax) shall not apply to so much of any underpayment as the corporation can establish, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is properly attributable to the inapplicability of such subparagraph (B) for such taxable year.

(h) Effective Dates.—

(1) General rule.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1974.

(2) Exceptions.—

(A) Section 301(e) of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975, as added by subsection (d), shall apply for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

(B) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b)(1) shall apply for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

(C) The amendments made by subsections (b)(4) and (f) shall apply for years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Sec. 804. Investment Credit in the Case of Movie and Television Films.

(a) Special Rules for Movie and Television Films.—Section 48 (relating to definitions and special rules for purposes of the investment credit) is amended by redesignating subsection (k) as subsection (l) and by inserting after subsection (j) the following new subsection:

"(k) Movie and Television Films.—

"(1) Entitlement to credit.—

"(A) In general.—A credit shall be allowable under section 38 to a taxpayer with respect to any motion picture film or video tape—

"(i) only if such film or tape is new section 38 property (determined without regard to useful life) which is a qualified film, and

"(ii) only to the extent that the taxpayer has an ownership interest in such film or tape.

"(B) Qualified film defined.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified film' means any motion picture film or video tape created primarily for use as public entertainment or for educational purposes. Such term does not include any film or tape the market for which is primarily topical or is otherwise essentially transitory in nature.

"(C) Ownership interest.—For purposes of this subsection, a person's 'ownership interest' in a qualified film shall be determined on the basis of his proportionate share of any loss which may be incurred with respect to the production costs of such film.

"(2) Applicable percentage to be 66⅔.—Except as provided in paragraph (3), the applicable percentage under section 46(c)(2) for any qualified film shall be 66⅔ percent.

"(3) Election of 90-percent rule.—

"(A) In general.—If the taxpayer makes an election under this paragraph, the applicable percentage under section 46(c)(2) shall be determined as if the useful life of the film would have expired at the close of the first taxable year by the close of which the aggregate amount allowable as a deduction under section 167 would equal or exceed 90 percent of the basis of the film.

"(B) Making of election.—An election under this paragraph shall be made at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe. Such an election shall apply for the taxable year for which it is made and for all subsequent taxable years and may be revoked only with the consent of the Secretary.

"(C) Who may elect.—If for any prior taxable year paragraph (2) of this subsection applied to the taxpayer or any related business entity, or if for the taxable year paragraph (2) applies to any related business entity, an election under this paragraph may be made by the taxpayer only with the consent of the Secretary.

"(D) Related business entity.—Two or more corporations, partnerships, trusts, estates, proprietorships, or other entities shall be treated as related business entities if 50 percent or more of the beneficial interest in each of such entities is owned by the same or related persons (taking into account only persons who own at least 10 percent of such beneficial interest). For purposes of this subparagraph, a person is a related person to another person if—

"(i) such persons are component members of a controlled group of corporations (within the meaning of section 1563(a), except that section 1563(b)(2) shall not apply and except that 'more than 50 percent' shall be substituted for 'at least 80 percent' each place it appears in section 1563(a)), or

"(ii) the relationship between such persons would result in a disallowance of losses under section 267 or 707(b), except that for these purposes a family of an individual includes only his spouse and minor children. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'beneficial interest' means voting stock in the case of a corporation, profits interest or capital interest in the case of a partnership, or beneficial interest in the case of a trust or estate.

"(4) Predominant use test; qualified investment.—In the case of any qualified film—

"(A) section 48(a)(2) shall not apply, and

"(B) in determining qualified investment under section 46(c)(1), there shall be issued (in lieu of the basis of the property) an amount equal to the qualified United States production costs (as defined in paragraph (5)).

"(5) Qualified United States production costs.—

"(A) In general.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified United States production costs' means with respect to any film—

"(i) direct production costs allocable to the United States, plus

"(ii) if 80 percent or more of the direct production costs are allocable to the United States, all other production costs other than direct production costs allocable outside the United States.

"(B) Production costs.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'production costs' includes—

"(i) a reasonable allocation of general overhead costs,

"(ii) compensation (other than participations described in clause (vi)) for services performed by actors, production personnel, directors, and producers.

"(iii) costs of 'first' distribution of prints,

"(iv) the cost of the screen rights and other material being filmed,

"(v) 'residuals' payable under contracts with labor organizations, and

"(vi) participations payable as compensation to actors, production personnel, directors, and producers.

Participations in all qualified films placed in service by a taxpayer during a taxable year shall be taken into account under clause (vi) only to the extent of the lesser of 25 percent of each such participation or 12½ percent of the aggregate qualified United States production costs (other than costs described in clauses (v) and (vi) of this subparagraph) for such films, but taking into account for both the 25 percent limit and 12½ percent limit no more than $1,000,000 in participations for any one individual with respect to any one film. For purposes of this subparagraph (other than clauses (v) and (vi) and the preceding sentence), costs shall be taken into account only if they are capitalized.

"(C) Direct production costs.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'direct production costs' does not include items referred to in clause (i), (iv), (v), (vi) of subparagraph (B). The term also does not include advertising and promotional costs and such other costs as may be provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

"(D) ALLOCATION OF DIRECT PRODUCTION COSTS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) Compensation for services performed shall be allocated to the country in which the services are performed, except that payments to United States persons for services performed outside the United States shall be allocated to the United States. For purposes of the preceding sentence, payments to an electing small business corporation (within the meaning of section 1371) or a partnership shall be considered payments to a United States person only to the extent that such payments are included in the gross income of a United States person other than an electing small business corporation or partnership.

"(ii) Amounts for equipment and supplies shall be allocated to the country in which, with respect to the production of the film, the predominant use occurs.

"(iii) All other items shall be allocated under regulations prescribed by the Secretary which are consistent with the allocation principle set forth in clause (ii).

"(6) UNITED STATES.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'United States' includes the possessions of the United States."

(b) OVERESTIMATION OF USEFUL LIFE AND DISPOSITIONS WHERE 90-PERCENT RULE APPLIES.—Section 47(a) (relating to certain dispositions, etc., of section 38 property) is amended by adding after paragraph (6) the following new paragraph:

"(7) MOTION PICTURE FILMS AND VIDEO TAPES.—

"(A) DISPOSITION WHERE DEPRECIATION EXCEEDS 90 PERCENT OF BASIS OR COST.—A qualified film (within the meaning of section 48 (k)(1)(B)) which has an applicable percentage determined under section 48(k)(3) shall cease to be section 38 property with respect to the taxpayer at the close of the first day on which the aggregate amount allowable as a deduction under section 167 equals or exceeds 90 percent of the basis or cost of such film (adjusted for any partial dispositions).

"(B) OTHER DISPOSITIONS.—In the case of a disposition of the exclusive right to display a qualified film which has an applicable percentage determined under section 48(k) (3) in one or more mediums of publication or exhibition in one or more specifically defined geographical areas over the remaining initial period of commercial exploitation of the film or tape in such geographical areas, the taxpayer shall be considered to have disposed of all or part of such film or tape and shall recompute the credit earned on all of his basis or cost or on that part of the basis or cost properly allocable to that part of the film or tape disposed of. In the case of an affiliated group of corporations, a transfer within the affiliated group shall not be treated as a disposition until there is a transfer outside the group. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'affiliated group' has the meaning given to such term by section 1504 (determined as if section 1504(b) did not include paragraph (3) thereof). For purposes of this paragraph, section 1504(a) shall be applied by substituting '50 percent' for '80 percent' each place it appears.".

(c) ALTERNATIVE METHODS OF COMPUTING CREDIT FOR PAST PERIODS—.

(1) GENERAL RULE FOR DETERMINING USEFUL LIFE, PREDOMINANT FOREIGN USE, ETC.—In the case of a qualified film (within the meaning of section 48(k)(1)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) placed in service in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1975, with respect to which neither an election under paragraph (2) of this subsection nor an election under subsection (e)(2) applies—

(A) the applicable percentage under section 46(c)(2) of such Code shall be determined as if the useful life of the film would have expired at the close of the first taxable year by the close of which the aggregate amount allowable as a deduction under section 167 of such Code would equal or exceed 90 percent of the basis of such property (adjusted for any partial dispositions),

(B) for purposes of section 46(c)(1) of such Code, the basis of the property shall be determined by taking into account the total production costs (within the meaning of section 48(k)(5)(B) of such Code),

(C) for purposes of section 48(a)(2) of such Code, such film shall be considered to be used predominantly outside the United States in the first taxable year for which 50 percent or more of the gross revenues received or accrued during the taxable year from showing the film were received or accrued from showing the film outside the United States, and

(D) section 47(a)(7) of such Code shall apply.

(2) ELECTION OF FORTY-PERCENT METHOD.—

(B) EFFECT OF ELECTION.—If the taxpayer makes an election under this paragraph, then section 48(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall apply to all qualified films described in subparagraph (A) with the following modifications:

(i) subparagraph (B) of paragraph (4) shall not apply, but in determining qualified investment under section 46(c)(1) of such Code, there shall be used (in lieu of the basis of such property) an amount equal to 40 percent of the aggregate production costs (within the meaning of paragraph (5)(B) of such section 48(k)),

(ii) paragraph (2) shall be applied by substituting "100 percent" for "66⅔ percent", and

(iii) paragraph (3) and paragraph (5) (other than subparagraph (B)) shall not apply.

(C) RULES RELATING TO ELECTIONS.—An election under this paragraph shall be made not later than the day which is 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act and shall be made in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall by regulations prescribe. Such an election may be revoked only with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

(D) THE TAXPAYERS MUST CONSENT TO JOIN IN CERTAIN PROCEEDINGS.—No election may be made under this paragraph or subsection (e) (2) by any taxpayer unless he consents, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate, to treat the determination of the investment credit allowable on each film subject to an election as a separate cause of action, and to join in any judicial proceeding for determining the person entitled to, and the amount of, the credit allowable under section 38 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to any film covered by such election.

(3) ELECTION TO HAVE CREDIT DETERMINED IN ACCORDANCE WITH PREVIOUS LITIGATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A taxpayer described in subparagraph (B) may elect to have this paragraph apply to all films (whether or not qualified) placed in service in taxable years beginning before January 1, 1975, and with respect to which an election under subsection (e)(2) is not made.

(B) WHO MAY ELECT.—A taxpayer may make an election under this paragraph if he has filed an action in any court of competent jurisdiction, before January 1, 1976, for a determination of such taxpayer's rights to the allowance of a credit against tax under section 38 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1975, with respect to any film.

(C) EFFECT OF ELECTION.—If the taxpayer makes an election under this paragraph—

(i) paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection, and subsection (d) shall not apply to any film placed in service by the taxpayer, and

(ii) subsection 48(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall not apply to any film placed in service by the taxpayer in any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1975, and with respect to which an election under subsection (e)(2) is not made, and the right of the taxpayer to the allowance of a credit against tax under section 38 of such Code with respect to any film placed in service in any taxable year beginning befor January 1, 1975, and as to which an election under subsection (e)(2) is not made, shall be determined as though this section (other than this paragraph) has not been enacted.

(D) RULES RELATING TO ELECTIONS.—An election under this paragraph shall be made not later than the day which is 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, by filing a notification of such election with the national office of the Internal Revenue Service. Such an election, once made, shall be irrevocable.

(d) ENTITLEMENT TO CREDIT.—Paragraph (1) of section 48(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to entitlement to credit) shall apply to any motion picture film or video tape placed in service in any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1975.

"(a) Certain Acquisitions of Stock of a Corporation.—

"(1) In general.—If—

"(A) on the last day of a taxable year of a corporation,

"(B) any one or more of the persons described in paragraph (4)(B) own, directly or indirectly, a percentage of the total fair market value of the participating stock or of all the stock of the corporation which exceeds by more than 60 percentage points the percentage of such stock owned by such person or persons at—

"(i) the beginning of such taxable year, or

"(ii) the beginning of the first or second preceding taxable year, and

"(C) such increase in percentage points is attributable to—

"(i) a purchase by such person or persons of such stock, or of the stock of another corporation owning stock in such corporation, or of an interest in a partnership or trust owning stock in such corporation,

"(ii) an acquisition (by contribution, merger, or consolidation) of an interest in a partnership owning stock in such corporation, or an acquisition (by contribution, merger, or consolidation) by a partnership of such stock,

"(iii) an exchange to which section 351 (relating to transfer to corporation controlled by transferor) applies, or an acquisition by a corporation of such stock in an exchange in which section 351 applies to the transferor,

Sec. 806. Additional Net Operating Loss Carryover Years; Limitations on Net Operating Loss Carryovers.

"(iv) a contribution to the capital of such corporation,

"(v) a decrease in the amount of such stock outstanding or in the amount of stock outstanding of another corporation owning stock in such corporation (except a decrease resulting from a redemption to pay death taxes to which section 303 applies),

"(vi) a liquidation of the interest of a partner in a partnership owning stock in such corporation, or

"(vii) any combination of the transactions described in clauses (i) through (vi), then the net operating loss carryover, if any, from such taxable year and the net operating loss carryovers, if any, from prior taxable years to such taxable year and subsequent taxable years of such corporation shall be reduced by the percentage determined under paragraph (2).

"(2) Reduction of net operating loss.—The reduction applicable under paragraph (1) shall be the sum of the percentages determined by multiplying—

"(A) by three and one-half the increase in percentage points (including fractions thereof) in excess of 60 and up to and including 80, and

"(B) by one and one-half the increase in percentage points (including fractions thereof) in excess of 80.

The reduction under this paragraph shall be determined by reference to the increase in percentage points of the total fair market value of the participating stock or of all the stock, whichever increase is greater.

"(3) Minimum ownership rule.—Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), a net loss carryover from a taxable year shall not be reduced under this subsection if, at all times during the last half of such taxable year, any of the persons described in paragraph (4)(B) (determined on the last day of the taxable year referred to in paragraph (1)(A)) owned at least 40 percent of the total fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock of the corporation. For the purposes of the preceding sentence, persons owning stock of a corporation on the last day of its first taxable year shall be considered to have owned such stock at all times during the last half of such first taxable year.

"(4) Operating rules.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) Definition of purchase.—The term 'purchase' means an acquisition of stock the basis of which is determined by reference to its cost to the holder thereof.

"(B) Description of person or persons.—The person or persons referred to in paragraph (1) (B) shall be the 15 persons (or such lesser number as there are persons owning the stock on the last day of the taxable year) who own the greatest percentage of the total fair market value of all the stock on the last day of that year, except that if any other person owns the same percentage of such stock at such time as is owned by one of the 15 persons, that other person shall also be included. If any of the persons are so related that the stock owned by one is attributed to the other under the rules specified in subparagraph (C), such persons shall be considered as only one person solely for the purpose of selecting the 15 persons (more or less) who own the greatest percentage of the total fair market value of all the stock.

"(C) Constructive ownership.—Section 318 (relating to constructive ownership of stock) shall apply in determining the ownership of stock, except that section 318(a) (2) (C) and 318(a) (3) (C) shall be applied without regard to the 50 percent limitation contained therein.

"(D) Short taxable years.—If one of the taxable years of the corporation referred to in paragraph (1) (B) is a short taxable year, then such paragraph and paragraph (6) shall be applied by substituting 'first, second, or third' for 'first or second' each time such phrase occurs.

"(5) Exceptions.—This subsection shall not apply to a purchase or other acquisition of stock (or of an interest in a partnership or trust owning stock in the corporation)—

"(A) from a person whose ownership of stock would be attributed to the holder by application of paragraph (4) (C) to the extent that such stock would be so attributed;

"(B) if (and to the extent) the basis thereof is determined under section 1014 or 1023 (relating to property acquired from a decedent), or section 1015(a) or (b) (relating to property acquired by gift or transfers in trust);

"(C) by a security holder or creditor in exchange for the relinquishment or extinguishment in whole or part of a claim against the corporation, unless the claim was acquired for the purpose of acquiring such stock;

"(D) by one or more persons who were full-time employees of the corporation at all times during the period of 36 months ending on the last day of the taxable year of the corporation (or at all times during the period of the corporation's existence, if shorter);

"(E) by a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501 (a) and which benefits exclusively the employees (or the beneficiaries) of the corporation, including a member of a controlled group of corporations (within the meaning of section 1563(a) determined without regard to section 1563(a) (4) and (e) (3) (C)) which includes such corporation;

"(F) by an employee stock ownership plan meeting the requirements of section 301(d) of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975; or

"(6) Successive applications of subsection.—If—

"(A) a net operating loss carryover is reduced under this subsection at the end of a taxable year of a corporation, and then, for purposes of applying this subsection as of the end of the first or second succeeding taxable year (as the case may be), stock owned by such person at the end of such succeeding taxable year shall be considered owned by such person at the beginning of the first or second preceeding taxable year. Other rules relating to the manner and extent of successive applications of this section in the case of increases in ownership and transfers of stock by the persons described in paragraph (4) (B) shall be prescribed by regulations issued by the Secretary.

"(B) any person described in paragraph (4) (B) who owns stock of the corporation on the last day of such taxable year does not own, on the last day of the first or second succeeding taxable year of the corporation, a greater percentage of the total fair market value of the participating stock or of all the stock of the corporation than such person owned on the last day of such taxable year.

"(b) Reorganizations.—

"(1) In general.—If one corporation acquires the stock or assets of another corporation in a reorganization described in section 368(a) (1) (A), (B), (C), (D) (but only if the requirements of section 354(b) (1) are met), or (F), and if—

"(A) the acquiring or acquired corporation has a net operating loss for the taxable year which includes the date of the acquisition, or a net operating loss carryover from a prior taxable year to such taxable year, and

"(B) the shareholders (immediately before the reorganization) of such corporation (the 'loss corporation'), as the result of owning stock of the loss corporation, own (immediately after the reorganization) less than 40 percent of the total fair market value of the participating stock or of all the stock of the acquiring corporation, then the net operating loss carryover (if any) of the loss corporation from the taxable year which includes the date of the acquisition, and the net operating loss carryover (if any) of the loss corporation from prior taxable years to such taxable year and subsequent taxable years, shall be reduced by the percentage determined under paragraph (2).

"(2) Reduction of net operating loss carryover.—

"(A) Ownership of 20 percent or more.—If such shareholders own less than 40 percent, but not less than 20 percent, of the total fair market value of participating stock or of all the stock of the acquiring corporation, the reduction applicable under paragraph (1) shall be the precentage equal to the number of percentage points (including fractions thereof) less than 40 percent, multiplied by three and one-half.

"(B) Ownership of less than 20 percent.—If such shareholders own less than 20 percent of the total fair market value of the participating stock or of all the stock of the acquiring corporation, the reduction applicable under paragraph (1) shall be the sum of—

"(i) the percentage that would be determined under subparagraph (A) if the shareholders owned 20 percent of such stock, plus

"(ii) the percentage equal to the number of percentage points (including fractions thereof) of such stock less than 20 percent, multiplied by one and one-half.

The reduction under this paragraph shall be determined by reference to the lesser of the percentage of the total fair market value of the participating stock or of all the stock of the acquiring corporation owned by such shareholders.

"(3) Losses of controlled corporations.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) Holding companies.—If, immediately before the reorganization, the acquiring or acquired corporation controls a corporation which has a net operating loss for the taxable year which includes the date of the acquisition, or a net operating loss carryover from a prior taxable year to such taxable year, the acquiring or acquired corporation, as the case may be, shall be treated as the loss corporation (whether or not such corporation is a loss corporation). The reduction, if any, so determined under paragraph (2) shall be applied to the losses of such controlled corporation.

"(B) Triangular reorganizations.—Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (5), if the shareholders of the loss corporation (immediately before the reorganization) own, as a result of the reorganization, stock in a corporation controlling the acquiring corporation, such shareholders shall be treated as owning (immediately after the reorganization) a percentage of the total fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock of the acquiring corporation owned by the controlling corporation equal to the percentage of the fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock, respectively, of the controlling corporation owned by such shareholders.

"(4) Special rules.—For purposes of applying paragraph (1) (B)—

"(A) Certain related transactions.—If, immediately before the reorganization—

"(i) one or more shareholders of the loss corporation own stock of such corporation which such shareholder acquired during the 36-month period ending on the date of the acquisition in a transaction described in paragraph (1) or in subsection (a) (1) (C) (unless excepted by subsection (a) (5)), and

"(ii) such shareholders own more than 50 percent of the total fair market value of the stock of another corporation a party to the reorganization, or any such shareholder is a corporation controlled by another corporation a party to the reorganization, then such shareholders shall not be treated as shareholders of the loss corporation with respect to such stock.

"(B) Certain prior ownership of loss corporation.—If, immediately before the reorganization, the acquiring or acquired corporation owns stock of the loss corporation, then paragraph (1) (B) shall be applied by treating the shareholders of the loss corporation as owning an additional amount of the total fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock of the acquiring corporation, as a result of owning stock in the loss corporation, equal to the total fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock of the loss corporation, respectively, owned (immediately before the reorganization) by the acquiring or acquired corporation. This subparagraph shall not apply to stock of the loss corporation owned by the acquiring or acquired corporation if such stock was acquired by such corporation within the 36-month period ending on the date of the reorganization in a transaction described in subsection (a) (1) (C) (unless excepted by subsection (a) (5)); or to a reorganization described in section 368(a) (1) (B) or (C) to the extent the acquired corporation does not distribute the stock received by it to its own shareholders.

"(C) Certain asset acquisitions.—If a loss corporation receives stock of the acquiring corporation in a reorganization described in section 368(a) (1) (C) and does not distribute such stock to its shareholders, paragraph (1) (B) shall be applied by treating the shareholders of the loss corporation as owning (immediately after the reorganization) such undistributed stock in proportion to the fair market value of the stock which such shareholders own in the loss corporation.

"(5) Certain stock-for-stock reorganizations.—In the case of a reorganization described in section 368(a) (1) (B) in which the acquired corporation is a loss corporation—

"(A) Stock which is exchanged.—Paragraphs (1) (B) and (2) shall be applied by reference to the ownership of stock of the loss corporation (rather than the acquiring corporation) immediately after the reorganization. Shareholders of the loss corporation who exchange stock of the loss corporation shall be treated as owning (immediately after the reorganization) a percentage of the total fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock of the loss corporation acquired in the exchange by the acquiring corporation which is equal to the percentage of the total fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock, respectively, of the acquiring corporation owned (immediately after the reorganization) by such shareholders.

"(B) Stock which is not exchanged.—Stock of the loss corporation owned by shareholders immediately before the reorganization which was not exchanged in the reorganization shall be taken into account in applying paragraph (1)(B). For purposes of the preceding sentence, the acquiring corporation (or a corporation controlled by the acquiring corporation) shall not be treated as a shareholder of the loss corporation with respect to stock of the loss corporation acquired in a transaction described in paragraph (1), or in subsection (a)(1)(C) (unless excepted by subsection (a)(5)), during the 36-month period ending on the date of the exchange.

"(C) Triangular exchange.—For purposes of applying the rules in this paragraph, if the shareholders of the loss corporation receive stock of a corporation controlling the acquiring corporation, such shareholders shall be treated as owning a percentage of the participating stock and of all the stock of the acquiring corporation owned by the controlling corporation equal to the percentage of the total fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock, respectively, which such shareholders own of the controlling corporation immediately after the reorganization.

"(6) Exceptions.—The limitations in this subsection shall not apply—

"(A) if the same persons own substantially all the stock of the acquiring corporation and of the other corporation in substantially the same proportions; or

"(B) to a net operating loss carryover from a taxable year if the acquiring or acquired corporation owned at least 40 percent of the total fair market value of the participating stock and of all the stock of the loss corporation at all times during the last half of such taxable year.

For purposes of subparagraph (A), if the acquiring or acquired corporation is controlled by another corporation, the shareholders of the controlling corporation shall be considered as also owning the stock owned by the controlling corporation in that proportion which the total fair market value of the stock which each shareholder owns in the controlling corporation bears to the total fair market value of all the stock, in the controlling corporation.

"(c) Rules Relating to Stock.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'stock' means all shares of stock, except stock which—

"(A) is not entitled to vote,

"(B) is fixed and preferred as to dividends and does not participate in corporate growth to any significant extent,

"(C) has redemption and liquidation rights which do not exceed the paid-in capital or par value represented by such stock (except for a reasonable redemption premium in excess of such paid-in capital or par value), and

"(D) is not convertible into another class of stock.

"(2) The term 'participating stock' means stock (including common stock) which represents an interest in the earnings and assets of the issuing corporation which is not limited to a stated amount of money or property or percentage of paid-in capital or par value, or by any similar formula.

"(3) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations under which—

"(A) stock or convertible securities shall be treated as stock or participating stock, or

"(B) stock (however denoted) shall not be treated as stock or participating stock, by reason of conversion and call rights, rights in earnings and assets, priorities and preferences as to distributions of earnings or assets, and similar factors."

(A) the beginning of such taxable years, or

(B) January 1, 1978.

(3) Sections 382(b) and 383 (as it relates to section 382(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by subsections (e) and (f)), shall apply (and such sections as in effect prior to such amendment shall not apply) to reorganizations pursuant to a plan of reorganization adopted by one or more of the parties thereto on or after January 1, 1978. For purposes of the preceding sentence, a corporation shall be considered to have adopted a plan of reorganization on the date on which a resolution of the board of directors is passed adopting the plan or recommending its adoption to the shareholders, or on the date on which the shareholders approve the plan of reoganization, whichever is earlier.

If such a taxpayer elects the overall limitation for a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1979, such section 904(e) shall be applied by substituting "the January 1, of the last year for which such taxpayer is on the per-country limitation" for "January 1, 1976" each place it appears therein.

SEC. 1032. RECAPTURE OF FOREIGN LOSSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 904 (as amended by section 1031 of this Act) is amended by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (g) and by inserting after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(f) RECAPTURE OF OVERALL FOREIGN LOSS.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this subpart and section 936, in the case of any taxpayer who sustains an overall foreign loss for any taxable year, that portion of the taxpayer's taxable income from sources without the United States for each succeeding taxable year which is equal to the lesser of—

"(A) the amount of such loss (to the extent not used under this paragraph in prior taxable years), or

"(B) 50 percent (or such larger percent as the taxpayer may choose) of the taxpayer's taxable income from sources without the United States for such succeeding taxable year, shall be treated as income from sources within the United States (and not as income from sources without the United States).

"(2) OVERALL FOREIGN LOSS DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'overall foreign loss' means the amount by which the gross income for the taxable year from sources without the United States (whether or not the taxpayer chooses the benefits of this subpart for such taxable year) for such year is exceeded by the sum of the deductions properly apportioned or allocated thereto, except that there shall not be taken into account—

"(A) any net operating loss deduction allowable for such year under section 172(a) or any capital loss carrybacks and carryovers to such year under section 1212, and

"(B) any—

"(i) foreign expropriation loss for such year, as defined in section 172(k)(1), or

"(ii) loss for such year which arises from fire, storm, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, to the extent such loss is not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

"(3) DISPOSITIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this chapter, if property which has been used predominantly without the United States in a trade or business is disposed of during any taxable year—

"(i) the taxpayer, notwithstanding any other provision of this chapter (other than paragraph (1)), shall be deemed to have received and recognized taxable income from sources without the United States in the taxable year of the disposition, by reason of such disposition, in an amount equal to the lesser of the excess of the fair market value of such property over the taxpayer's adjusted basis in such property or the remaining amount of the overall foreign losses which were not used under paragraph (1) for such taxable year or any prior taxable year, and

"(ii) paragraph (1) shall be applied with respect to such income by substituting '100 percent' for '50 percent'.

In determining for purposes of this subparagraph whether the predominant use of any property has been without the United States, there shall be taken into account use during the 3-year period ending on the date of the disposition (or, if shorter, the period during which the property has been used in the trade or business).

"(B) DISPOSITION DEFINED AND SPECIAL RULES.—

"(i) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'disposition' includes a sale, exchange, distribution, or gift of property whether or not gain or loss is recognized on the transfer.

"(ii) Any taxable income recognized solely by reason of subparagraph (A) shall have the same characterization it would have had if the taxpayer had sold or exchanged the property.

"(iii) The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary to provide for adjustments to the basis of property to reflect taxable income recognized solely by reason of subparagraph (A).

"(C) EXCEPTIONS.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (B), the term 'disposition' does not include—

"(i) a disposition of property which is not a material factor in the realization of income by the taxpayer, or

"(ii) a disposition of property to a domestic corporation in a distribution or transfer described in section 381(a).

"(4) DETERMINATION OF FOREIGN OIL RELATED LOSS WHERE SECTION 907 APPLIES.—In the case of a corporation to which section 907(b)(1) applies, the foreign oil related loss shall be the amount by which the gross income for the taxable year from sources without the United States and its possessions (whether or not the taxpayer chooses the benefits of this subpart for such taxable year) taken into account in determining the foreign oil related income for such year is exceeded by the sum of the deductions properly apportioned or allocated thereto, except that there shall not be taken into account—

"(A) any net operating loss deduction allowable for such year under section 172(a) or any capital loss carrybacks and carryovers to such year under section 1212, and

"(B) any—

"(i) foreign expropriation loss for such year, as defined in section 172(k)(1), or

"(ii) loss for such year which arises from fire, storm, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, to the extent such loss is not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.".

(1) by striking out the last sentence of subsection (b) (as amended by section 1035 (b)), and

(2) by striking out subsection (f), and by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (f).

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b)(2) shall apply to losses sustained in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975, and the amendment made by subsection (b)(1) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

(2) OBLIGATIONS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall not apply to losses on the sale, exchange, or other disposition of bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness issued before May 14, 1976, by a foreign government or instrumentality thereof for the acquisition of property located in that country or stock of a corporation (created or organized in or under the laws of that foreign country) or indebtedness of such corporation.

(3) SUBSTANTIAL WORTHLESSNESS BEFORE ENACTMENT.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall not apply to losses incurred on the loss from stock or indebtedness of a corporation in which the taxpayer owned at least 10 percent of the voting stock and which has sustained losses in 3 out of the last 5 taxable years beginning before January 1, 1976, which has sustained an overall loss for those 5 years, and with respect to which the taxpayer has terminated or will terminate all operations by reason of sale, liquidation, or other disposition before January 1, 1977, of such corporation or its assets.

(4) Limitation based on deficit in earnings and profits.—If paragraph (3) would apply to a taxpayer but for the fact that the loss is sustained after December 31, 1976, and if the loss is sustained in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1979, the amendments made by subsection (a) shall not apply to such loss to the extent that there was on December 31, 1975, a deficit in earnings and profits in the corporation from which the loss arose.

"Sec. 902. Credit for Corporate Stockholder in Foreign Corporation.

"(a) Treatment of Taxes Paid by Foreign Corporation.—For purposes of this subpart, a domestic corporation which owns at least 10 percent of the voting stock of a foreign corporation from which it receives dividends in any taxable year shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war profits, or excess profits taxes paid or deemed to be paid by such foreign corporation to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States, on or with respect to the accumulated profits of such foreign corporation from which such dividends were paid, which the amount of such dividends (determined without regard to section 78) bears to the amount of such accumulated profits in excess of such income, war profits, and excess profits taxes (other than those deemed paid).

"(b) Foreign Subsidiary of First and Second Foreign Corporation.—

"(1) One tier.—If the foreign corporation described in subsection (a) (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the 'first foreign corporation') owns 10 percent or more of the voting stock of a second foreign corporation from which it receives dividends in any taxable year, it shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war profits, or excess profits taxes paid or deemed to be paid by such second foreign corporation to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States, on or with respect to the accumulated profits of such second foreign corporation from which such dividends were paid, which the amount of such dividends bears to the amount of such accumulated profits in excess of such income, war profits, and excess profits taxes (other than those deemed paid).

"(2) Two tiers.—If such first foreign corporation owns 10 percent or more of the voting stock of a second foreign corporation which, in turn, owns 10 percent or more of the voting stock of a third foreign corporation from which the second foreign corporation receives dividends in any taxable year, the second foreign corporation shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war profits, or excess profits taxes paid by such third foreign corporation to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States, on or with respect to the accumulated profits of such third foreign corporation from which such dividends were paid, which the amount of such dividends bears to the amount of such accumulated profits in excess of such income, war profits, and excess profits taxes.

"(3) Voting stock requirement.—For purposes of this subpart—

"(A) paragraph (1) shall not apply unless the percentage of voting stock owned by the domestic corporation in the first foreign corporation and the percentage of voting stock owned by the first foreign corporation in the second foreign corporation when multiplied together equal at least 5 percent, and

"(B) paragraph (2) shall not apply unless the percentage arrived at for purposes of applying paragraph (1) when multiplied by the percentage of voting stock owned by the second foreign corporation in the third foreign corporation is equal to at least 5 percent.

"(c) Applicable Rules.—

"(1) Accumulated profits defined.—For purposes of this section, the term 'accumulated profits' means, with respect to any foreign corporation, the amount of its gains, profits, or income computed without reduction by the amount of the income, war profits, and excess profits taxes imposed on or with respect to such profits or income by any foreign country or by any possession of the United States. The Secretary shall have full power to determine from the accumulated profits of what year or years such dividends were paid, treating dividends paid in the first 60 days of any year as having been paid from the accumulated profits of the preceding year or years (unless to his satisfaction shown otherwise), and in other respects treating dividends as having been paid from the most recently accumulated gains, profits or earnings.

"(2) Accounting periods.—In the case of a foreign corporation the income, war profits, and excess profits taxes of which are determined on the basis of an accounting period of less than 1 year, the word 'year' as used in this subsection, shall be construed to mean such accounting period.

"(d) Cross References.—

"(2) the percentage which is the sum of the normal tax rate and the surtax rate for the taxable year specified in section 11.

(b) FOREIGN OIL RELATED INCOME EARNED BY INDIVIDUALS.—Subsection (b) of section 907 (relating to special rules in case of foreign oil and gas income) is amended to read as follows:

Such amount deemed paid or accrued in any taxable year may be availed of only as a tax credit and not as a deduction and only if the taxpayer for such year chooses to have the benefits of this subpart as to taxes paid or accrued for that year to foreign countries or possessions. For purposes of this subsection, the terms 'second preceding taxable year', and 'first preceding taxable year' do not include any taxable year ending before January 1, 1975. "(i) the taxes paid or accrued (or deemed to have been paid under section 902 or 960) to all foreign countries and possessions of the United States with respect to such income during such taxable year,

"(ii) the amount of such taxes which were deemed paid or accrued in such taxable year under section 904(c) and which are attributable to taxable years preceding the unused credit year, plus

"(iii) the amount of the oil and gas extraction taxes which by reason of this subsection are deemed paid or accrued in such taxable year and are attributable to taxable years preceding the unused credit year.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) In the case of any taxable year which is an unused credit year under this subsection and which is an unused credit year under section 904(c) with respect to oil-related income, the provisions of this subsection shall be applied before section 904(c).

"(B) For purposes of determining the amount of oil-related taxes paid or accrued in any taxable year which may be deemed paid or accrued in a preceding or succeeding taxable year under section 904(c), any tax deemed paid or accrued in such preceding or succeeding taxable year under this subsection shall be considered to be tax paid or accrued in such preceding or succeeding taxable year.

"(C) For purposes of determining the amount of the unused oil and gas extraction taxes which under paragraph (1) may be deemed paid or accrued in any taxable year ending before January 1, 1977, subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2) shall be applied as if the amendment made by section 1035(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 applied to such taxable year."

(3) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Subsection (i) of section 6501, as amended by section 1031, (relating to foreign tax carrybacks) is amended—

(A) by striking out "excess foreign taxes)" and inserting in lieu thereof "excess foreign taxes) or under section 907(f) (relating to carryback and carryover of disallowed oil and gas extraction taxes)"; and

"(A) of a foreign corporation (hereafter in this subsection referred to as the 'first foreign corporation') at least 10 percent of the voting stock of which is owned by such domestic corporation, or

(a) AMENDMENT OF SUBCHAPTER L.—Subpart E of part I of subchapter L of chapter 1 (relating to life insurance companies) is amended by inserting after section 819 the following new section:

"SEC. 819A. CONTIGUOUS COUNTRY BRANCHES OF DOMESTIC LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

"(a) EXCLUSION OF ITEMS.—In the case of a domestic mutual insurance company which—

"(1) is a life insurance company,

"(2) has a contiguous country life insurance branch, and

"(3) makes the election provided by subsection (g) with respect to such branch, there shall be excluded from each and every item involved in the determination of life insurance company taxable income the items separately accounted for in accordance with subsection (c).

"(b) CONTIGUOUS COUNTRY LIFE INSURANCE BRANCH.—For purposes of this section, the term 'contiguous country life insurance branch' means a branch which—

"(1) issues insurance contracts insuring risks in connection with the lives or health of residents of a country which is contiguous to the United States,

"(2) has its principal place of business in such contiguous country, and

"(3) would constitute a mutual life insurance company if such branch were a separate domestic insurance company.

For purposes of this section, the term 'insurance contract' means any life, health, accident, or annuity contract or reinsurance contract or any contract relating thereto.

"(c) Separate Accounting Required.—Any taxpayer which makes the election provided by subsection (g) shall establish and maintain a separate account for the various income, exclusion, deduction, asset, reserve, liability, and surplus items properly attributable to the contracts described in subsection (b). Such separate accounting shall be made—

"(1) in accordance with the method regularly employed by such company, if such method clearly reflects income derived from, and the other items attributable to, the contracts described in subsection (b), and

"(2) in all other cases, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

"(d) Recognition of Gain of Assets in Branch Account.—If the aggregate fair market value of all the invested assets and tangible property which are separately accounted for by the domestic life insurance company in the branch account established pursuant to subsection (c) exceeds the aggregate adjusted basis of such assets for purposes of determining gain, then the domestic life insurance company shall be treated as having sold all such assets on the first day of the first taxable year for which the election is in effect at their fair market value on such first day. Notwithstanding any other provision of this chapter, the net gain shall be recognized to the domestic life insurance company on the deemed sale described in the preceding sentence.

"(e) Transactions Between Contiguous Country Branch and Domestic Life Insurance Company.—

"(1) Reimbursement for home office services, etc.—Any payment, transfer, reimbursement, credit, or allowance which is made from a separate account established pursuant to subsection (c) to one or more other accounts of a domestic life insurance company as reimbursement for costs incurred for or with respect to the insurance (or reinsurance) of risks accounted for in such separate account shall be taken into account by the domestic life insurance company in the same manner as if such payment, transfer, reimbursement, credit, or allowance had been received from a separate person.

"(2) Repatriation of income.—

"(A) In general.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), any amount directly or indirectly transferred or credited from a branch account established pursuant to subsection (c) to one or more other accounts of such company shall, unless such transfer or credit is a reimbursement to which paragraph (1) applies, be added to the life insurance company taxable income of the domestic life insurance company (as computed without regard to this paragraph).

"(B) Limitation.—The addition provided by subparagraph (A) for the taxable year with respect to any contingous country life insurance branch shall not exceed the amount by which—

"(i) the aggregate decrease in the life insurance company taxable income of the domestic life insurance company for the taxable year and for all prior taxable years resulting solely from the application of subsection (a) of this section with respect to such branch, exceeds

"(ii) the amount of additions to life insurance company taxable income pursuant to subparagraph (A) with respect to such contiguous country branch for all prior taxable years.

"(f) Other Rules.—

"(1) Treatment of foreign taxes.—

"(A) In general.—No income, war profits, or excess profits taxes paid or accrued to any foreign country or possession of the United States which is attributable to income excluded under subsection (a) shall be taken into account for purposes of subpart A of part III of subchapter N (relating to foreign tax credit) or allowable as a deduction.

"(B) Treatment of repatriated amounts.—For purposes of sections 78 and 902, where any amount is added to the life insurance company taxable income of the domestic life insurance company by reason of subsection (e)(2), the contiguous country life insurance branch shall be treated as a foreign corporation. Any amount so added shall be treated as a dividend paid by a foreign corporation, and the taxes paid to any foreign country or possession of the United States with respect to such amount shall be deemed to have been paid by such branch.

"(2) United states source income allocable to contiguous country branch.—For purposes of sections 881, 882, and 1442, each contiguous country life insurance branch shall be treated as a foreign corporation. Such sections shall be applied to each such branch in the same manner as if such sections contained the provisions of any treaty to which the United States and the contiguous country are parties, to the same extent such provisions would apply if such branch were incorporated in such contiguous country.

"(g) Election.—A taxpayer may make the election provided by this subsection with respect to any contiguous country for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1975. An election made under this subsection for any taxable year shall remain in effect for all subsequent taxable years, except that it may be revoked with the consent of the Secretary. The election provided by this subsection shall be made not later than the time prescribed by law for filing the return for the taxable year (including extensions thereof) with respect to which such election is made, and such election and any approved revocation thereof shall be made in the manner provided by the Secretary.

"(h) Special Rule for Domestic Stock Life Insurance Companies.—At the election of a domestic stock life insurance company which has a contiguous country life insurance branch described in subsection (b) (without regard to the mutual requirement in subsection (b)(3)), the assets of such branch may be transferred to a foreign corporation organized under the laws of the contiguous country without the application of section 367 or 1491. Subsection (a) shall apply to the stock of such foreign corporation as if such domestic company were a mutual company and as if the stock were an item described in subsection (c). Subsection (e)(2) shall apply to amounts transferred or credited to such domestic company as if such domestic company and such foreign corporation constituted one domestic mutual life insurance company. The insurance contracts which may be transferred pursuant to this subsection shall include only those which are similar to the types of insurance contracts issued by a mutual life insurance company. Notwithstanding the first sentence of this subsection, if the aggregate fair market value of the invested assets and tangible property which are separately accounted for by the domestic life insurance company in the branch account exceeds the aggregate adjusted basis of such assets for purposes of determining gain, the domestic life insurance company shall be deemed to have sold all such assets on the first day of the taxable year for which the election under this subsection applies and the net gain shall be recognized to the domestic life insurance company on the deemed sale, but not in excess of the proportion of such net gain which equals the proportion which the aggregate fair market value of such assets which are transferred pursuant to this subsection is of the aggregate fair market value of all such assets."

"(4) Transitional rule for banks.—In the case of a corporation which would be a bank except for the fact that it is a foreign corporation, the net gain, if any, for the taxable year on sales and exchanges described in paragraph (1) shall be considered as gain from the sale or exchange of a capital asset to the extent such net gain does not exceed the portion of any capital loss carryover to such taxable year which is attributable to capital losses on sales or exchanges described in paragraph (1) for a taxable year beginning before July 12, 1969. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the portion of a net capital loss for a taxable year which is attributable to capital losses on sales or exchanges described in paragraph (1) is the amount of the net capital loss on such sales or exchanges for such taxable year (but not in excess of the net capital loss for such taxable year)."

(b) Effective Date.—

(1) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after July 11, 1969.

(2) If the refund or credit of any overpayment attributable to the application of the amendment made by subsection (a) to any taxable year is otherwise prevented by the operation of any law or rule of law (other than section 7122 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, relating to compromises) on the day which is one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, such credit or refund shall be nevertheless allowed or made if claim therefor is filed on or before such day.

"(b) WILLFUL UNDERSTATEMENT OF LIABILITY.—If any part of any understatement of liability with respect to any return or claim for refund is due to a willful attempt in any manner to understate the liability for a tax by a person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return or claim, such person shall pay a penalty of $500 with respect to such return or claim. For purposes of this paragraph, such values in the such spot markets shall be based upon the standards for grades of cotton established by the Secretary. SEC. 2701. EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS.

The Congress, in a series of laws (the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973, the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, the Trade Act of 1974, and the Tax Reduction Act of 1975) and this Act has made clear its interest in encouraging employee stock ownership plans as a bold and innovative method of strengthening the free private enterprise system which will solve the duel problems of securing capital funds for necessary capital growth and of bringing about stock ownership by all corporate employees. The Congress is deeply concerned that the objectives sought by this series of laws will be made unattainable by regulations and rulings which treat employee stock ownership plans as conventional retirement plans, which reduce the freedom of the employee trusts and employers to take the necessary steps to implement the plans, and which otherwise block the establishment and success of these plans. Because of the special purposes for which employee stock ownership plans are established, it is consistent with the intent of Congress to permit these plans (whether structured as pension, stock bonus, or profit-sharing plans) to distribute income on employer securities currently.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 1

House bill.—No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 2

House bill.—The House bill includes a short title, the table of contents, and the limitation on artificial losses (LAL).

LAL provides a limit on accelerated deductions which may be taken currently to the net income from the property. It applied to real estate, farming, oil and gas, movies, equipment leasing, and sports franchises. The amount of the accelerated deductions not allowed currently are to be deferred and made available in subsequent years to the extent of net income from the property in a subsequent period.

Under present law, interest and taxes on real property during the construction period may be deducted currently or may be capitalized and depreciated over the life of the property. The House bill applies LAL to interest and taxes during the construction period and to accelerated depreciation (in excess of straight-line depreciation) on a consolidated basis for all real property. Generally, this provision applied to construction beginning after 1975. An exception is provided for residential construction begun before January 1, 1978 (if there is a binding commitment before 1977), and for governmentally subsidized housing on which construction begins before January 1, 1981 (if a binding commitment is obtained before 1979).

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment includes "findings" that it is the sense of the Senate to deal with the problems of converting ordinary income into capital gain and the deferral of tax resulting from the use of tax shelters by the minimum tax, at risk provisions, recapture provisions, capitalization provisions in certain cases, and partnership provisions.

The Senate amendment does not apply LAL to construction period interest and taxes or to the accelerated depreciation on real property in excess of straight-line depreciation. However, a Senate amendment restricts the amount of partnership liabilities which may be included in a limited partner's basis in his partnership interest to an amount equal to any further contributions (over and above any actual contributions) which the limited partner is obligated to make pursuant to the partnership agreement. The effect of this provision is to limit deductions which may be passed through to a limited partner to the amount of investment which he actually has and will have at risk in the partnership. (In addition, a Senate amendment included interest during the construction period as a preference item in the minimum tax.)

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement includes the short title and inserts a table of contents which conforms to the conference action. In the case of real estate, the conference agreement adopts a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment, as follows:

103. Capitalization and Amortization of Real Property Construction Period Interest and Taxes

Under the conference agreement, construction period interest and taxes are to be capitalized in the year in which they are paid or incurred and amortized over a 10-year period. A portion of the amount capitalized may be deducted for the taxable year in which paid or incurred. The balance must be amortized over the remaining years in the amortization period beginning with the year in which the property is ready to be placed in service or is ready to be held for sale.

The provision is not to apply to any amount that is capitalized at the election of the taxpayer as a carrying charge under present law (sec. 266). In addition, the provision is not to apply to interest or taxes paid or incurred with respect to property that is not held (or will not be held) for business or investment purposes (e.g., the taxpayer's residence).

Under the conference agreement, separate tansitional rules are provided for non-residential real estate, residential real estate, and government subsidized housing.

In the case of nonresidential real estate, this provision is to apply only to property where the construction period begins after December 31, 1975. In the case of residential real estate (other than certain low-income housing), this provision is to apply to construction period interest and taxes paid or accrued after December 31, 1977, and, in the case of low-income housing, to construction period interest and taxes paid or accrued after December 31, 1981. For this purpose, the definition of low-income housing is to be the same as the Senate amendment relating to depreciation recapture.

In addition, the length of the amortization period is to be phased-in over a 7-year period. The amortization period is to be 4 years in the case of interest and taxes or accrued in the first year to which these rules apply. The amortization period increases by one year for each succeeding year after initial effective date until the amortization period becomes 10 years (i.e., the 10-year period is fully phased-in for construction period interest and taxes paid or accrued in 1982, in the case of non-residential real estate; 1984, in the case of residential real estate, and 1988, in the case of government subsidized housing). As a transition rule for 1976, the amount that may be deducted currently is 50 percent and the remaining 50 percent is to be amortized over a 3-year period beginning in the year the property is ready to be placed in service or is ready to be held for sale.

The application of the general transitional rules and the phase-in of the amortization period can be illustrated by the following example. Assume that $120,000 of interest and taxes are paid or accrued in 1980 with respect to the construction of residential real estate (other than government subsidized) and that the property is ready to be placed in service in 1982. For taxable year 1980, the $120,000 must be capitalized under this provision, but a deduction is to be allowed for $20,000 ($\frac{1}{6}$ of the amount capitalized). The remaining $100,000 (i.e., $\frac{5}{6}$ of the total) is to be deducted ratably over a 5-year period beginning in 1982 (the year in which the property is placed in service). Thus, $20,000 is to be allowed as a deduction for taxable year 1982 and in each of the next 4 years.

In the case of a sale or exchange of property, the unamortized balance of the construction period interest and taxes is to be added to the basis of the property for purposes of determining gain or loss on the sale or exchange. In the case of a nontaxable transfer or exchange (i.e., a transfer to a partnership or controlled corporation, a like-kind exchange, or a gift), the transferor is to continue to deduct the amortization allowable over the amortization period remaining after the transfer. Thus, in these cases, the allowance of the deduction is considered to be personal to the taxpayer who paid or incurred the interest and taxes because the deduction would have been allowed to him currently but for the capitalization requirement.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 3

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment includes a short title, a reference to the fact that the provisions included in the bill refer to the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and a provision which requires the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate to submit to the Committee on Ways and Means, not later than 90 days after date of enactment of the Act, a draft of any technical and conforming changes necessary to reflect the substantive provisions provided by the Act.

Conference agreement.—Under the conference agreement, the short title and the reference to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 are included in Senate amendment numbered 2. The conference agreement does not include the provision requiring the Treasury to submit a draft of changes.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 4

201. Recapture of Depreciation on Real Property

House bill.—Under present law, special rules are provided for the recapture of depreciation allowed (or allowable) as a deduction with respect to real estate. In the case of non-residential real estate, any gain realized is treated or "recaptured" as ordinary income to the extent of post-1969 depreciation taken in excess of straight-line depreciation. In the case of residential property generally, this rule applies to property held during the first 100 months ($8\frac{1}{3}$ years) with a phaseout during the next 100 months; that is, no recapture after $16\frac{2}{3}$ years. For governmentally subsidized housing, acquired or constructed before January 1, 1976, the phaseout begins at 20 months ($1\frac{2}{3}$ years) and is completed at 120 months (10 years).

The House bill modifies the existing rules relating to the recapture of depreciation on real estate. In the case of residential real estate, the House bill provides for the recapture of all post-1975 depreciation in excess of straight-line, in the same manner as is presently the case for non-residential real estate. In the case of government subsidized housing, the bill provides full recapture of post-1975 depreciation in excess of a straight-line for the first 100 months ($8\frac{1}{3}$ years) and a phaseout of the amount recaptured during the second 100 months (up to $16\frac{2}{3}$ years). There will be no recapture thereafter.

Senate amendment.—In the case of residential real estate (other than government subsidized housing), the Senate amendment is the same as the House bill. In the case of government subsidized housing, the Senate amendment provides full recapture where the construction of the property commences after 1981. In the case where the construction of the property commenced before 1982 (or pursuant to a binding contract entered before such date), the amount of recapture attributable to accelerated depreciation taken after 1975 is to be the present 100-month rule for residential real property. The Senate amendment extends the definition of low-income housing to include subsidized housing programs administered by the Farmers Home Administration.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill with one modification. With respect to the definition of low-income housing, the conference agreement adopts the definition provided in the Senate amendment.

201A. Five-year Amortization for Low-Income Housing

House bill.—Special rules are provided under present law to permit the rapid amortization of expenditures to rehabilitate low-income rental housing. In the case of low-income rental housing, taxpayers can elect to compute depreciation on certain rehabilitation expenditures over 60 months if the additions or improvements have a useful life of 5 years or more. The aggregate rehabilitation expenditures as to any housing must not exceed $15,000 per dwelling unit and the sum of the rehabilitation expenditures for two consecutive taxable years must exceed at least $3,000 per dwelling unit. This special 5-year amortization rule for low-income rental housing expired on December 31, 1975.

The House bill extends the special 5-year depreciation rule for two years (until January 1, 1978). Also the aggregate rehabilitation expenditures that can be taken into account per dwelling unit is increased from $15,000 to $20,000.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that it provides that rehabilitation expenditures that are made pursuant to a binding contract entered into before January 1, 1978, would qualify for the 5-year amortization rule even though the expenditures are actually made after December 31, 1977. The amendment also modifies the definition of families and individuals of low income by providing that the income limits would be determined in a manner consistent with those presently established for the leased housing program under sec. 8 of the 1937 Housing Act.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 5

202. Limitation on Deductions to Amount at Risk

House bill.—Under present law, the amount of losses a taxpayer may claim on any investment activity is generally limited to the taxpayer's cost or other basis in the activity. Basis included not only the taxpayer's actual cash investment in the property and liabilities the taxpayer is obligated to pay, but also costs financed through nonrecourse loans for which the taxpayer will not be held personally liable. The taxpayer's actual risk of economic loss may also be further limited by other contractual arrangements (such as guarantees or repurchase agreements). As a result, a taxpayer is, in many situations, entitled to deduct losses which substantially exceed the amount he is actually "at risk" in an activity.

The House bill provides that the amount of any loss (otherwise allowable for the year) which may be deducted in connection with (1) the raising of livestock (other than poultry) and the raising or harvesting of grain, oil seed, fiber, pasture, tobacco, silage, or forage crops, or (2) the trade or business of producing, distributing or displaying a motion picture, television film or series for public entertainment cannot exceed the aggregate amount with respect to which the taxpayer is at risk in each such business at the close of the taxable year.

In general, this provision applies to losses incurred after September 10, 1975, in taxable years ending after that date. In the case of films or television tapes, this provision does not apply if the principal photography had begun before September 11, 1975, or if a binding contract for nonrecourse financing of the film was in effect before that date. Also, this provision does not apply to films produced in the United States if the principal photography had begun before January 1, 1976, if certain commitments with respect to that film were made by September 10, 1975.

The House bill also provides that the amount of any deduction (otherwise allowable for the year) for intangible drilling and development costs with respect to oil and gas property may not exceed the aggregate amount with respect to which the taxpayer is at risk at the close of the taxable year. This provision applies to intangible drilling and development costs paid or incurred after December 31, 1975, in taxable years ending after that date.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment provides that the amount of any loss (otherwise allowable for the year) which may be deducted in connection with one of certain activities cannot exceed the aggregate amount with respect to which the taxpayer is at risk in each such activity at the close of the taxable year. This "at risk" limitation applies to the following activities: (1) farming (except farming operations involving trees other than fruit or nut trees); (2) exploring for, or exploiting, oil and gas resources; (3) holding, producing, or distributing motion picture films or video tapes; and (4) equipment leasing. The limitation applies to all taxpayers (other than corporations which are not subchapter S corporations) including individuals and sole proprietorships, estates, trusts, shareholders in subchapter S corporations, and partners in a partnership which conducts an activity described in this provision.[1]

Under this provision, a taxpayer is generally to be considered "at risk" with respect to an activity to the extent of his cash and the adjusted basis of other property contributed to the activity, any amounts borrowed for use in the activity with respect to which the taxpayer has personal liability for payment from his personal assets, and his net fair market value of personal assets which secure nonrecourse borrowings. The Senate amendment applies to losses attributable to amounts paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

In applying the at risk provision to farming operations,[2] the conferees intend that the existence of a governmental target price program (such as provided by the Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973) or other governmental price support program with respect to a product grown by a taxpayer does not, in the absence of agreements limiting the taxpayers' costs, reduce the amount which such taxpayer is at risk.

[1] Since, except for subchapter S corporations, this provision does not limit the deductibility of amounts paid or incurred by corporations, the provision would not apply to a partnership in which all the partners are corporations (other than subchapter S corporations).

[2] The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment's definition of farming. Thus, the at risk provision does not apply to forestry or the growing of timber.

In general, the at risk provisions apply to losses attributable to amounts paid or incurred (and depreciation or amortization allowed or allowable) in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975. However, with respect to equipment leasing activities, the conferees agreed that the at risk rule would not apply to net leases under binding contracts finalized on or before December 31, 1975, and to operating leases under binding contracts finalized on or before April 30, 1976. With respect to motion picture activities, the conferees also agreed that the at risk provision does not apply to a film purchase shelter if the principal photography began before September 11, 1975, there was a binding written contract for the purchase of the film on that date, and the taxpayer held his interest in the film on that date. The at risk rule also does not apply to production costs, etc., if the principal photography began before September 11, 1975, and the investor had acquired his interest in the film before that date. In addition, the at risk provision does not apply to a film produced in the United States if the principal photography began before January 1, 1976, if certain commitments with respect to the film had been made by September 10, 1975.

In applying the at risk provisions to activities which were begun in taxable years beginning before January 1, 1976 (and not exempted from this provision by the above transition rules), amounts paid or incurred in taxable years beginning prior to that date and deducted in such taxable years will generally be treated as reducing first that portion of the taxpayers basis which is attributable to amounts not at risk. (On the other hand, withdrawals made in taxable years beginning before January 1, 1976, will be treated as reducing the amount which the taxpayer is at risk.)

202A. The Recapture of Intangible Drilling Costs for Oil and Gas Wells

House bill.—The House bill requires that amounts deducted for intangible drilling expenses on productive wells are to be recaptured upon disposition of the oil or gas property by treating those amounts as ordinary income to the extent that they exceed the amounts which would be allowed if the intangible expenses were capitalized and amortized over the useful life of the well. The provision applies with respect to costs paid or incurred after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 6

203. Termination of Additions to Excess Deductions Accounts (EDA)

House bill.—Present law (sec. 1251) provides, in general, that where a taxpayer has generated substantial losses from farming operations in excess of his income from farming operations (in the same or later years than the losses), he may have to treat certain farm income he later realizes as ordinary income rather than capital gain. The amount of potential recapture is measured by the farm losses in the taxpayer's excess deductions account (EDA). The House bill provides that there will be no further additions to EDA accounts in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill with respect to further additions to EDA accounts. The Senate amendment adds a provision allowing divisive "D" reorganizations without triggering EDA recapture. In these reorganizations, the entire EDA account is applied to both the transferor corporation and the transferee corporation. This provision applies to reorganizations occurring after December 31, 1975.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 7

204 (a) and (b). Limitations on Deductions for Farming Syndicates and Capitalization of Certain Orchard and Vineyard Expenses

House bill.—No provision. (However, the House bill applies LAL to farming operations and subjected farming syndicates to more restrictive rules than other farming enterprises.)

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment requires farming syndicates (1) to deduct expenses for feed, seed, fertilizer, and other farm supplies only when used or consumed (not when paid); (2) to capitalize costs of poultry; and (3) to capitalize the costs of planting, cultivating, maintaining and developing a grove, orchard or vineyard which are incurred prior to the year the grove, orchard or vineyard becomes productive. This provision applies generally to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975, except that it does not apply to farming syndicates in which securities have been registered for sale with the Securities and Exchange Commission prior to April 15, 1976. The rules apply to orchards, groves and vineyards planted after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment. However, the definition of "farming syndicate" is revised. A farming syndicate includes (1) a partnership or any other enterprise (other than a corporation which has not elected to be taxed under subchapter S) engaged in the trade or business of farming if at any time interests in the partnership or other enterprise have been offered for sale in an offering required to be registered with any Federal or State agency having authority to regulate the offering of securities for sale or (2) a partnership or any other enterpirse (other than a corporation which has not elected to be taxed under subchapter S) engaged in the trade or business of farming if more than 35 percent of the losses during any period are allocable to limited partners or limited entrepreneurs.[1] In general, a limited entrepreneur means a person who has an interest in an enterprise other than a partnership and who does not actively participate in the management of the enterprise.

The determination of whether a person actively participates in the operation or management of a farm depends upon the facts and circumstances. Factors which tend to indicate active participation include participating in the decisions involving the operation or management of the farm, actually working on the farm, living on the farm, or hiring and discharging employees (as compared to only the farm manager). Factors which tend to indicate a lack of active participation include lack of control of the management and operation of the farm, having authority only to discharge the farm manager, having a farm manager who is an independent contractor rather than an employee, and having limited liability for farm losses.

The provision specifies four cases where an individual's activity with respect to a farm will result in his not being treated as a limited partner or limited entrepreneur. These cases cover the situations where an individual—

(1) has an interest attributable to his active participation for a period of not less than 5 years in the management of a trade or business of farming;

(2) lives on the farm on which the trade or business of farming is being carried on;

(3) actively participates in the management of a trade or business of farming which involves the raising of livestock (or is treated as being engaged in active management pursuant to one of the first two exceptions set forth above), and the trade or business of the partnership or any other enterprise involves the further processing of the livestock raised in the trade or business with respect to which he is (actually or constructively) an active participant; or

(4) is a member of the family (within the meaning of section 267(c)(4)) of a grandparent of an individual who would be excepted under any of the first three cases listed above and his interest is attributable to the active participation of such individual.

For purposes of the farming syndicate rules, activities involving the growing or raising of trees (other than fruit or nut trees) are not considered farming. Thus, this provision does not apply to forestry or the growing of timber.

The provisions of the conference agreement relating to prepaid feed and other farm supplies and poultry expenses apply generally to amounts paid or incurred in taxable years after December 31, 1975. In the case of farming syndicates in existence on December 31, 1975 (but only if there is no change in membership in the farming syndicate between December 31, 1975, and the end of the syndicate's last taxable year beginning before January 1, 1977), these provisions apply to amounts paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976. The provisions relating to orchards, groves and vineyards do not apply where the trees or vines were planted or purchased for planting prior to December 31, 1975, or where there was a binding contract to purchase the trees or vines in effect on December 31, 1975.[2]

204(c) Accrual Accounting for Farm Corporations

House bill.—Under present law, any taxpayer engaged in farming may use the cash method of accounting and generally can deduct preproductive period expenses. The House bill generally requires any corporation (other than a subchapter S corporation or a family corporation) and any partnership in which a corporation is a partner to use the accrual method of accounting and to capitalize preproductive period expenses. This provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill with several modifications.

The exception for family corporations is broadened by providing that a corporation can qualify if the members of one family own, directly or through attribution, at least 50 percent (rather than 66⅔ percent) of the voting stock and of all other classes of stock of such corporation. (The lowering of this percentage makes unnecessary two special rules in the House bill, relating to "two-family" ownership and existing stockholdings of certain employees.) The family corporation exception in the House bill is also broadened by allowing attribution of stock ownership, under certain circumstances, through two tiers of corporations.[3]

[1] The term "partnership" is used only in a descriptive sense: it is not intended that this definition of farming syndicate operate to preclude the Internal Revenue Service from applying the regulations under section 7701 to an organization described in such definition to determine its proper classification (as a partnership or corporation) for Federal tax purposes.

[2] The conference agreement provides that if a farming syndicate is engaged in planting, cultivating, maintaining or developing a citrus or almond grove, the provisions of section 278(a) which require capitalization of costs which are attributable to planting, cultivating, maintaining or developing the grove and which are incurred before the close of the fourth taxable year from the year of planting apply prior to the capitalization rules of section 278(b) (which requires the costs to be capitalized if they are incurred prior to the first year in which the grove bears a crop or yield in commercial quantities).

The conference agreement also added an exception to cover small corporations since a principal justification for use of the cash method of accounting in agriculture is that small enterprises should not be required to keep books and records on the accrual method of accounting. The provision exempts any corporation whose gross receipts (when combined with the gross receipts of related corporations) do not exceed $1,000,000 per year. However, once this level of receipts is exceeded for a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1975, the corporation must change to the accrual method of accounting for subsequent taxable years and may not change back to the cash method of accounting for subsequent taxable years even if its receipts subsequently fall below $1,000,000.

The conference agreement also adds an exception to the required accrual accounting rules for nurseries. Thus, a corporation which is engaged in the business of operating a nursery will not be required to utilize the accrual method of accounting by reason of this section of the conference agreement. No inference is intended, however, with respect to any business operation which is required to utilize the accrual method of accounting under provisions of existing law.

Similarly, the conference agreement makes it clear that for purposes of this provision, a corporation engaged in forestry or the growing of timber is not thereby engaged in the business of farming.[4] Consequently, this provision is not intended to affect the method of accounting (or treatment of preproductive period expenses) of corporations engaged in forestry or the growing of timber.

The conference agreement also adds special rules which provide that if a corporation (or its predecessors) has, for a 10-year period prior to the date of enactment, used an "annual" accrual method of accounting (in which preproductive period expenses are either deducted currently or charged to the current year's crops), it may continue to use this method of accounting. Also, a taxpayer who has used, for a 10-year period, the static value method of accounting for the costs of deferred crops may change to the annual accrual method of accounting and be treated as if it had used such method of accounting for that 10-year period.

Under the conference agreement, this provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.[5]

205. Prepaid Interest

House bill.—Under present law, a taxpayer reporting his income on the accrual method of accounting can deduct prepaid interest only in the period or periods in which the interest represents the cost of using the funds during that period. However, generally, a cash method taxpayer can deduct expenses in the year he actually pays them. It is unsettled, however, whether a cash method taxpayer can deduct prepaid interest in full in the year paid. Recent court decisions have supported the Internal Revenue Service in requiring a cash method taxpayer to allocate his deductions for prépaid interest over the period of the loan.

The House bill requires a cash method taxpayer to deduct prepaid interest over the period of the loan to the extent the interest represents the cost of using the borrowed funds during each period. The House bill also requires points paid on a loan to be deducted ratably over the term of the loan, except in the case of a mortgage incurred in connection with the purchase or improvement of, and secured by, the taxpayer's principal residence. The House bill applies to prepayments made after September 16, 1975, except for prepayments made before January 1, 1976, pursuant to a binding contract or loan commitment in existence on September 16, 1975 (and at all times thereafter).

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that the rule permitting current deductibility of points on a home mortgage is amended to apply only if points are generally charged in the geographical area where the loan is made and to the extent of the number of points generally charged in that area for a home loan. The Senate amendment applies to prepayments of interest on and after January 1, 1976, except for interest paid before January 1, 1978, pursuant to a binding contract or written loan commitment in existence on September 16, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment; however, the exception for prepayments of interest pursuant to a binding contract or written loan commitments in existence on September 16, 1975, applies only to prepayments made before January 1, 1977.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 9

206. Limitation on deduction of investment interest

House bill.—Under present law the deduction for interest on investment indebtedness is limited to $25,000 per year plus the taxpayer's net investment income and long-term capital gain plus ½ of any interest in excess of these amounts. The House bill limits the interest deduction for nonbusiness interest (i.e., personal plus investment interest) to $12,000 per year plus the amount of a taxpayer's net investment income and long-term capital gain. However, in no case can personal interest in excess of $12,000 be deducted in any year. Any investment interest which is not deductible because of this limitation may be carried forward and deducted in future years. (There is no carryover of any unused personal interest.)

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment has no limitation on the deductibility of personal or investment interest (although investment interest in excess of investment income, but not capital gains, is made a preference for purposes of the minimum tax).

Conference agreement.—Under the conference agreement, interest on investment indebtedness is limited to $10,000 per year, plus the taxpayer's net investment income. No offset of investment interest is permitted against long-term capital gain. An additional deduction of up to $15,000 more per year is permitted for interest paid in connection with indebtedness incurred by the taxpayer to acquire the stock in a corporation, or a partnership interest, where the taxpayer, his spouse, and his children have (or acquired) at least 50 percent of the stock or capital interest in the enterprise. Interest deductions which are disallowed under these rules are subject to an unlimited carryover and may be deducted in future years (subject to the applicable limitation). Under the conference agreement, no limitation is imposed on the deductibility of personal interest.

Generally, these rules are applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975. However, under a transition rule, present law (sec. 163(d) before the amendments made under the conference agreement) continues to apply in the case of interest on indebtedness which is attributable to a specific item of property, is for a specified term, and was either incurred before September 11, 1975, or is incurred after that date under a binding written contract or commitment in effect on that date and at all times thereafter (hereinafter referred to as "pre-1976 interest"). As under present law, interest incurred before December 17, 1969 ("pre-1970 interest") is not subject to a limitation.

Under the conference agreement, carryovers are to retain their character. Thus, carryovers of pre-1976 interest will continue to be deductible under the limitation of present law. Carryovers of post-1975 interest will be subject to the new rules adopted under the conference agreement.

In a case where the taxpayer has interest which is attributable to more than one period (pre-1970, pre-1976, and post-1975), the taxpayer's net investment income is to be allocated between (or among) these periods. For example, assume a taxpayer has $30,000 of pre-1976 interest and $60,000 of post-1975 interest; also assume that the taxpayer has $45,000 of investment income. Under the conference agreement, one-third of the investment income ($15,000) is to be allocated to the pre-1976 interest, which would be fully deductible (the $25,000 allowance, plus the $15,000 of net investment income—exceeds the $30,000 of pre-1976 interest, which is therefore fully deductible). Two-thirds of the net invesmtent income ($30,000) is allocated to the post-1975 interest; this amount, added to the $10,000 allowance provided under the conference agreement, would result in a total deduction of $40,000 for the post-1975 interest. The remaining amount, ($20,000) could be carried forward.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 10

207. Amortization of Production Costs of Motion Pictures, Books, Records, and Other Similar Property

House bill.—No provision. (The House bill applies LAL to depreciation or amortization of a film or video tape and also applies LAL to costs of producing, displaying and distributing a film or video tape.)

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment does not have a LAL provision. The Senate amendment does apply an at risk rule to the film production shelter (see Senate amendment numbered 5). In addition, the Senate amendment contains a capitalization rule, which requires individuals and subchapter S corporations to capitalize the costs of producing and distributing motion pictures, books, records and other similar property and permits them to deduct these capitalized costs over the life of the income stream generated from the production activity. The amendment applies to amounts paid or incurred after December 31, 1975, with respect to property the principal production of which begins after December 31, 1975.

[3] In determining family ownership under this provision, the conferees believe that, if the trustee of a trust has discretion to distribute income or principal to family members or charities and if the trustee has made no distributions (or taken deductions for set-asides) to charities, family beneficiaries should be treated as the sole beneficiaries of the trust.

[4] This exclusion of forestry or the growing of timber from "farming" is consistent with the distinction drawn in regulations relating to provisions of the Code allowing taxpayers engaged in the trade or business of farming to deduct currently expenditures for soil or water conservation, fertilizer for land used in farming, and land clearing (secs. 175, 180, 182 and Regs. §§ 1.175–3, 1.180–1 (b), and 1.182–2).

[5] A partnership with a corporate general partner may be required to use the accrual method of accounting and may also be a farming syndicate subject to limitations on deductible expenses for prepaid feed and other farm supplies, expenses for poultry, and certain expenses of orchards, groves and vineyards. However, feed and other farm supplies are required to be inventoried under the accrual method of accounting, and the expenses (of poultry, orchards, groves and vineyards) that must be capitalized under the farming syndicate rules are also capitalizable preproductive period expenses under the accrual method of accounting (as required by this provision). Consequently, the application of both provisions is not inconsistent: the farming syndicate rules do not appear to impose any additional requirements for an organization subject to this provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the capitalization rules of the Senate amendment. However, the rules are to apply only to production costs (including the costs of making prints of the film for distribution) and not to distribution costs.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 11

208. Clarification of Definition of Produced Film Rents

House bill.—Under present law "produced film rents" is one category of personal holding company income. Generally, this category covers payments received by a corporation from the distribution and exhibition of motion picture films if these rents arise from an "interest" in the film acquired before the completion of production. Produced film rents are not treated as personal holding company income, however, if such rents constitute 50 percent or more of the corporation's ordinary gross income.

The House bill clarifies any ambiguities in present law regarding whether a qualifying "interest" in a film includes interests other than depreciable interests. Under the House bill, in the case of a producer who actively participates in producing a film, the term "produced film rents" includes an interest in the proceeds or profit from the film, but only to the extent that this interest is attributable to active participation in production activities.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

209. Sports Franchise Provisions

House bill.—Under present law, depreciation taken with respect to player contracts is recaptured on a contract-by-contract basis. In addition, no provision under present law prescribes definitive rules relating to the allocation of a portion of the purchase price for a franchise to depreciable player contracts. Finally, under present law, no portion of the depreciation of player contracts is treated as a tax preference for purposes of the minimum tax.

The House bill applies LAL to depreciation (or amortization) of a specified portion of the basis in player contracts. In the case of the sale or exchange of a sports franchise, the House bill provides that the amount allocable to player contracts by a purchaser could not exceed the amount of the sales price allocated to these contracts by the seller. The House bill also provides a presumption that in the case of the sale or exchange of a sports franchise, not more than 50 percent of the consideration would be allocable to player contracts unless the taxpayer can satisfy the Secretary of the Treasury that (under the facts and circumstances of the particular case) it is proper to allocate an amount in excess of 50 percent.

Senate amendment.—With respect to the allocation of basis to player contracts, the Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that it adds a provision in the case of a one-year corporate liquidation to take into account for purposes of computing the adjusted basis of player contracts. Gain realized by the corporation (but only to the extent gain is recognized by the shareholders) and it does not contain the 50-percent presumption rule.

With respect to recapture of depreciation, the Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that (1) the pool recapture of depreciation and deductions for losses taken with respect to player contracts applies only in the case of the sale or exchange of the entire sports franchise and (2) the amount subject to recapture on the sale of the entire sports franchise would be limited to the greater of (a) the sum of the depreciation taken plus any deductions taken for losses attributable to player contracts initially acquired as a part of the original acquisition of the franchise, or (b) the amount of depreciation taken on those player contracts owned by the seller at the time of sale of the franchise: but not in excess of the gain, if any, attributable to player contracts. This provision would apply to transfers of player contracts in connection with any sale of a franchise after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment. However, the conference agreement adopts the 50-percent presumption rule contained in the House bill which is made applicable to the allocation of basis to player contracts acquired in connection with the purchase of a sports franchise.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 13 PARTNERSHIP PROVISIONS

210(a). Dollar Limitation With Respect to Additional First Year Depreciation for Partnerships

House bill.—Under present law, an owner of certain tangible personal property is eligible to elect, for the first year the property is depreciated, a deduction for additional first-year (or "bonus") depreciation of 20 percent of the cost of the property. The maximum bonus depreciation deduction is limited to $2,000 ($4,000 for an individual filing a joint return). Where the owner is a partnership, the election for bonus depreciation is made by the partnership; however, the dollar limitation described above is applied to each individual partner rather than to the partnership as a whole.

Under the House bill, the amount of the additional first-year depreciation that a partnership can pass through to its partners in any taxable year is limited to $2,000. This provision applies in the case of partnership taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conferenec agreement.—The conference agreement is the same as the House bill and the Senate amendment.

210(b). Partnership Syndication and Organization Fees

House bill.—Until recently, it has been common for limited partnerships to claim a deduction for payments made to a general partner for services rendered by him with respect to the syndication and organization of the limited partnership. Recently, the Service ruled (Rev. Rul. 75-214, 1975-1 C.B. 185) that these payments represent capital expenditures and, as such, are not currently deductible. Moreover, in a recent case the United States Tax Court disallowed the deduction for payments of this type made to a general partner. (Jackson E. Cagle, Jr., 63 T.C. 86 (1974), on appeal to C.A. 5.)

The House bill requires that fees paid in connection with the organization and syndication of a partnership be capitalized. This provision applies to all taxable years to which the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 applies.

Senate amendment.—The Senate bill is the same as the House bill with respect to syndication fees, but allows the amortization of organization fees over a 5-year period. The provisions in the Senate amendment apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but the provision permitting the amortization of organization fees is delayed until taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976. The conferees intend that no inferences should be drawn as to the deductibility (when paid) of partnership organization and syndication fees paid or incurred in taxable years beginning before January 1, 1976.

210(c). Retroactive Allocations of Partnership Income or Loss

House bill.—Presently, investments in tax shelter limited partnerships are commonly made toward the end of the year. It is also common for the limited partnership to have been formed earlier in the year on a skeletal basis with one general partner and a so-called "dummy" limited partner. In many cases, the limited partnership incurs substantial deductible expenses prior to the year-end entry of the limited partner-investors. In these cases, a full share of the partnership's losses for the entire year is usually allocated to these limited partners. These are referred to as "retroactive allocations." It is not clear under present law whether retroactive allocations are permissible, although in practice they are frequently utilized.

The House bill provides that income or losses will be allocable to a partner only for the portion of the year he is a member of a partnership. In determining the income, loss or special item allocable to an incoming partner, the partnership will either allocate on a daily basis or separate the partnership year into two (or more) segments and allocate income, loss or special items in each segment among the persons who were partners during that segment. This provision applies to partnership taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as House bill, except for changes adding clarifying language.

210(d). Partnership Special Allocations

House bill.—Under present law, a partnership agreement may allocate income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit (or items thereof) among the partners in a manner that is disproportionate to the capital contributions of such partners. These are referred to as "special allocations" and, with respect to any taxable year, may be made by amendment to the partnership agreement at any time up to the initial due date of the partnership tax return for that year. A partnership agreement special allocation of "any item of income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit" will not be recognized, however, if its principal purpose is to avoid or evade any income tax. Since this provision applies to allocations of items of income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit, it has been argued that the provision does not apply to, and would not preclude, allocations of taxable income or loss, as opposed to specific items of income, gain, deduction, loss or credit.

The House bill provides that an allocation of taxable income or loss, as well as any item of income, gain, loss, deduction or credit, will be controlled by the partnership agreement only if the partner receiving the allocation can demonstrate that the allocation has a business purpose and that no significant tax avoidance or evasion results from the allocation. If an allocation made by the partnership is set aside, a partner's share of the income, gain, loss, deduction or credit (or item thereof) will be determined in accordance with the partnership's permanent method of allocating the taxable income or loss, or, if there is no such method, in accordance with the partner's interest in the partnership. These provisions apply to partnership taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except in two minor respects. First, the Senate amendment disallows a special allocation only if it lacks "substantial economic effect", while the House bill does so with respect to a special allocation if it lacks "a business purpose" or if "significant avoidance or evasion of any tax . . . results from such allocation." Second, in the event of a disallowance of a special allocation, the Senate amendment provides for reallocation only in accordance with the partner's interest in the partnership, thereby deleting the House bill's alternative method of reallocating in accordance with the partnership's permanent method of allocating taxable income or loss.

210(e). Treatment of Partnership Liabilities Where a Partner Is Not Personally Liable

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a limited partner may deduct his allocable share of all the deductible items of the partnership, but not more than the amount of the basis for his interest in the partnership. A limited partner's basis in his partnership interest is increased (in the same proportion as he shares profits) by any partnership liability with respect to which there is no personal liability on the part of any of the partners. Consequently, a limited partner may substantially increase the basis in his partnership interest, and thus the amount of partnership losses he may deduct, by a portion of the partnership liabilities with respect to which he has no personal liability. This rule enables limited partners to deduct amounts exceeding the amount of investment they have at risk in the partnership.

The Senate amendment restricts the amount of partnership liabilities which may be included in a limited partner's basis in his partnership interest to an amount equal to any further contributions (over and above any actual contributions) which the limited partner is obligated to make pursuant to the partnership agreement. The effect of this provision is to limit deductions which may be passed through to a limited partner to the amount of investment which he actually has and will have at risk in the partnership. This provision applies to limited partnerships formed after June 30, 1976, except in the case of low-income and moderate-income housing limited partnerships, where it will apply to limited partnership formed after December 31, 1981.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, providing that for purposes of the limitation on allowance of losses under section 704(d) of the Code, the adjusted basis of a partner's interest will not include any portion of any partnership liability with respect to which the partner has no personal liability.

It is intended that in determining whether a partner has personal liability with respect to any partnership liability, rules similar to the rules of section 465 (relating to the limitation on deductions to amounts at risk in case of certain activities) will apply. Thus, for example, guarantees and similar arrangements will be taken into account in determining whether there is personal liability.

This provision will not apply to any activity to which section 465 (relating to the limitation on deductions to amounts at risk in case of certain activities) applies, nor will it apply to any partnership the principal activity of which involves real property (other than mineral property).

It is contemplated that this provision and the specific at-risk rules section 465 could apply to a partnership carrying on more than one activity. For example, a partnership involved in equipment leasing, to which the at-risk provisions of section 465 would apply, may also be indebted on a nonrecourse basis with respect to activities which are unrelated to the equipment leasing activity of the partnership. In this instance, separate computations for purposes of allowance of losses would have to be made under both sections 465 and 704(d).

Under the conference agreement, this provision would apply to liabilities incurred after December 31, 1976.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 14

211. Scope of Waiver of Statute of Limitations in Case of Hobby Loss Elections

House bill.—Present law provides generally that if an activity makes a profit in two out of five years, it is presumed not to be a hobby (which would be subject to the limitations on deductions for hobby losses). In certain circumstances, a taxpayer may elect to have the results of certain years be relevant to the existence of this presumption for earlier years.

The House bill provides that a taxpayer need not waive the statute of limitations for unrelated items on his return in order to take advantage of this special presumption. This provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1969, except that it does not reopen taxable years with respect to which the statute of limitations has expired and does not limit general waivers of the statute of limitations.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 15

301(a). Minimum Tax for Individuals

House bill.—Under present law, individuals and corporations pay a minimum tax, in addition to their regular income tax, equal to 10 percent of their items of tax preference, reduced by a $30,000 exemption and their regular tax liability. The tax preferences subject to the minimum tax are: (1) the excluded one-half of capital gains; (2) the excess of percentage depletion over the basis of the property; (3) accelerated depreciation on real property; (4) the bargain element of stock options; (5) accelerated depreciation on personal property subject to a net lease; (6) the excess of amortization of on-the-job training and child care facilities over regular depreciation; (7) the excess of amortization of pollution control facilities over regular depreciation; (8) the excess of amortization of railroad rolling stock over regular depreciation; and (9) excess bad debt reserves of financial institutions. Regular taxes not used to offset preferences in the current year may be carried over for up to 7 additional years.

The House bill raises the minimum tax rate to 14 percent, abolishes the deduction for regular taxes, and reduces the exemption to $20,000 (with a phaseout as preferences rise to $40,000). The House bill adds the following new preferences: (1) itemized deductions in excess of 70 percent of adjusted gross income; (2) intangible drilling costs for oil and gas wells in excess of the deduction if costs were capitalized; (3) construction period interest and taxes; (4) accelerated depreciation on all leased personal property (including ADR and bonus first-year depreciation); and (5) depreciation on player contracts of sports teams acquired in connection with a franchise purchase. A deduction is not subject to the minimum tax if deferred under the Limitation on Artificial Losses (LAL). These changes apply only to individuals, estates and trusts.

Also, the House bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue regulations under which neither individuals nor corporations would be subject to the minimum tax on a tax preference if they received no tax benefit from the preference.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment raises the minimum tax rate to 15 percent and reduces the exemption to $10,000 or regular tax liability, whichever is greater. It eliminates the carryover of regular taxes. Also, it adds the following new preferences: (1) itemized deductions (other than medical and casualty deductions) in excess of 60 percent of adjusted gross income; (2) intangible drilling costs in excess of the amount deductible if capitalized and in excess of net income from oil production; (3) construction period interest; (4) accelerated depreciation on all personal property subject to a lease (excluding ADR and bonus first-year depreciation, as under present law); and (5) investment interest in excess of investment income (with income and interest expense of limited partners considered to be investment income and expense). Transition rules are provided for preferences (3) and (5) as applied to low- and moderate-income housing and to houses held as inventory for sale.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement raises the minimum tax rate to 15 percent. It reduces the exemption to $10,000 or one-half of regular tax liability, whichever is greater, in place of the $30,000 exemption and deduction for regular taxes under existing law. It repeals the carryover of unused regular taxes. Also, it includes the tax benefit rule from the House bill. It adds new preferences for: (1) itemized deductions (other than medical and casualty deductions) in excess of 60 percent of adjusted gross income: (2) intangible drilling costs in excess of the amount deductible if capitalized and written off over 10 years; and (3) accelerated depreciation on all personal property subject to a lease (including ADR but not bonus first-year depreciation).

The new preference for intangible drilling expenses applies to those expenses in excess of the amount which could have been deducted had the intangibles been capitalized and either (1) deducted over the life of the well as cost depletion, or (2) deducted ratably over 10 years, the taxpayer may choose whichever of these two methods of capitalization is most favorable. This preference does not apply to taxpayers who elect to capitalize their intangible drilling costs. Nor does it apply to nonproductive wells. For this purpose, nonproductive wells are those which are plugged and abandoned without having produced oil and gas in commercial quantities for any substantial period of time. Thus, a well which has been plugged and abandoned may have produced some relatively small amount of oil and still be considered a non-productive well, depending on the amount of oil produced in relation to the costs of drilling.

In some cases it may not be possible to determine whether a well is in fact nonproductive until after the close of the taxable year in question. In these cases, no preference is included in the minimum tax base with respect to any wells which are subsequently determined to be nonproductive. Thus, if a well is proved to be nonproductive after the end of the taxable year but before the tax return for the year in question is filed, that well can be treated as nonproductive on that return. If a well is not determined to be nonproductive by the time the return for the year in question is filed, the intangible expenses with respect to that well are to be subject to the minimum tax. However, the taxpayer may later file an amended return and claim a credit or refund for the amount of any minimum tax paid with respect to that well if the well subsequently proves to be nonproductive.

301(b). Minimum Tax for Corporations

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the minimum tax for corporations is the same as that for individuals, except that the capital gains preference equals 18/48 of capital gains (rather than one-half of such gains) and the preference for accelerated depreciation on personal property subject to a net lease does not apply. The Senate amendment raises the corporate minimum tax rate to 15 percent and reduces the exemption to $10,000 or regular tax liability, whichever is greater. It eliminates the carryover of regular taxes, effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975. It adds new preferences for construction period interest and accelerated intangible drilling costs in excess of related income. Timber is exempt from the increase in the minimum tax, and commercial banks are exempt from the increase in 1976 and 1977. For 1976, only one-half of the increase in the minimum tax applies. Subchapter S corporations and personal holding companies are treated like individuals under the Senate amendment, not corporations.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with several modifications. First, timber is made subject to the minimum tax on the same basis as other industries, but certain adjustments are allowed that have the effect of retaining the old minimum tax for timber. Second, the preferences for construction period interest and accelerated intangible drilling costs are not added to the base of the minimum tax. Third, the delayed effective date for commercial banks is extended to all financial institutions with excess bad debt reserves.

The conference agreement provides special rules for timber income of corporations, including both gains from the cutting of timber and long-term gains from the sale of timber. These rules have the effect of exempting timber income from the increase in the minimum tax for corporations. These rules provide that the item of tax preference for timber gains is to be reduced by one-third and then further reduced by $20,000. Also, the deduction for regular taxes is to be reduced by the lesser of (a) one-third or (b) the preference reduction described above. In effect, the adjustments compensate for the general minimum tax rate increase from 10 percent to 15 percent by scaling down the entire minimum tax base, as it relates to timber, by one-third and then subjecting that lower base to a 15-percent rate. This gives the same result as subjecting the normal tax base to a 10-percent rate. The reduction in timber preferences by $20,000 (two-thirds of $30,000), in effect, compensates timber for the loss of the $30,000 exemption.

The agreement also retains a regular tax carryover for timber. Taxpayers will first have to determine how much of their corporate income tax is attributable to timber income (including both gains from the cutting of timber and long-term gains from the sale of timber). This allocation is to be made under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. This allocation must be made for years prior to 1976 as well as future years, in order to determine how much of a corporation's existing regular tax carryover remains available for use in 1976 and subsequent years. The conferees do not intend that there be a carryover of regular taxes not attributable to timber income. To the extent that regular corporate income taxes attributable to timber exceed the items of tax preference in a taxable year, they may be carried forward for up to 7 additional years. The amount of the carryover that may be deducted in a subsequent year is limited to timber tax preferences in that year, reduced by the timber preference reduction described above, minus the regular tax deduction for the year (as reduced by the regular tax adjustment described above). This has the effect of permitting a carryforward of timber-related regular taxes that are not used in the current year and limiting the use of that carryforward to the part of the minimum tax base that is attributable to timber.

In accordance with the Senate amendment, the effective date of these changes is delayed for two years for commercial banks, and the delay is extended to other financial institutions. The conferees expect the Secretary of the Treasury to issue regulations dealing with how the minimum tax is to be computed for taxpayers who file consolidated returns with financial institutions. These will involve separating the minimum taxes of the corporations in the group for the years 1976 and 1977, and applying the new rules to preferences of corporations other than financial institutions and the old rules to financial institutions for these years.

In accordance with the Senate amendment, the general carryover of regular taxes is repealed effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 16

302. Maximum Tax

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, there is a maximum marginal tax rate of 50 percent on earned income. The amount of earned income eligible for the maximum tax is reduced by current year tax preferences (or, if greater, one-fifth of tax preferences for past five years) in excess of $30,000.

The Senate amendment eliminates the $30,000 exemption to the preference offset and the 5-year averaging provision. It adds the new minimum tax preferences to the preference offset. It also extends the maximum tax to pensions, annuities and deferred compensation.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with certain technical modifications. The additional preferences are those added to the minimum tax in the conference agreement, not the Senate amendment.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 17

Extensions of Individual Income Tax Reductions

401(a). General Tax Credit

House bill.—The Revenue Adjustment Act of 1975 included a credit equal to the greater of $35 per capita or 2 percent of the first $9,000 of taxable income. This applied for the first half of 1976. The House bill, which was passed before the Revenue Adjustment Act was enacted, includes a tax credit for 1976 equal to the greater of 2 percent of the initial $12,000 of taxable income or $30 per capita.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment extends the general tax credit in the Revenue Adjustment Act for the second half of 1976 and for calendar 1977.

401(b). Standard Deduction

House bill.—Prior to 1975, the minimum standard deduction was $1,300; the percentage standard deduction was 15 percent; and the maximum standard deduction was $2,000. The Tax Reduction Act of 1975 raised the minimum standard deduction to $1,600 for single returns and $1,900 for joint returns; raised the percentage standard deduction to 16 percent; and raised the maximum standard deduction to $2,300 for single returns and $2,600 for joint returns. These increases applied to 1975.

The Revenue Adjustment Act of 1975 raised the minimum standard deduction to $1,700 for single returns and $2,100 for joint returns; the percentage standard deduction to 16 percent; and the maximum standard deduction to $2,400 for single returns and $2,800 for joint returns. These changes applied only to the first half of 1976.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment makes permanent the larger increase in the standard deduction from the Revenue Adjustment Act of 1975.

401(c). Earned Income Credit

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the earned income credit equals 10 percent of the first $4,000 of earnings. It is phased out as adjusted gross income rises from $4,000 to $8,000 and is refundable. The credit is available only to people who maintain a household for a dependent child who is either under 19 or a student and for whom they are entitled to claim a personal exemption. This credit applied to 1975 and to the first 6 months of 1976.

The Senate amendment makes the earned income credit permanent. Also, it extends eligibility for the credit to people with adult disabled dependents and to people who maintain a houshold for a child who is either a student or under age 19 but who are not entitled to claim a personal exemption for the child.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that it extends the earned income credit only through calendar years 1976 and 1977.

402. Disregard of Earned Income Credit

House bill.—Under present law, refunds resulting from the earned income credit received before July 1, 1976, are to be disregarded in determining eligibility for any benefits under Federal or federally assisted aid programs if the recipient is a beneficiary in the month prior to the refund.

The House bill provides a permanent "disregard" without the requirement of present law that the recipient be a beneficiary of the program in the month before he receives the refund.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment provides a permanent "disregard" identical to the one that applied under present law.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendments for calendar years 1976 and 1977, as the conference agreement extends the earned income credit only through calendar 1977.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 18

Tax simplification for individuals

501. Revision of Tax Tables for Individuals

House bill.—Under present law, the tax tables are used by taxpayers who use the standard deduction and who have adjusted gross incomes below $10,000 ($15,000 for 1975 only). The House bill adopts new tax tables based on taxable income of $20,000 or less to be used by both standard deductors and itemizers, effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement is the same as the House bill and the Senate amendment.

502. Deduction for Alimony

House bill.—under present law, taxpayers claiming a deduction for alimony payments must claim them as an itemized deduction. The House bill changes the alimony deduction from an itemized deduction to a deduction in arriving at AGI. The change applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that it applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

503. Revision of Retirement Income Credit

House bill.—Under present law, for taxpayers age 65 or over, and for taxpayers under 65 who receive a public retirement system pension, a tax credit is provided equal to 15 percent of retirement income up to $1,524 for a single person and $2,286 for a married couple. The maximum amount of retirement income must be reduced on a dollar-for-dollar basis for social security and other types of exempt pension income. For taxpayers age 62 or over and under age 72, these base amounts for the credit are also reduced by one-half of the annual amount of earned income over $1,200 and under $1,700, and by the entire amount of earned income in excess of $1,700.

The House bill simplifies the rules on eligibility for the credit and increases the maximum base for the credit for a single person to $2,500 and for a married couple to $3,750. It also eliminates the parallel to social security by making the credit available for earned income as well as retirement income and renames the credit "credit for the elderly." The bill reduces the maximum amount of the credit base by one-half of AGI in excess of $7,500 for a single person and $10,000 for a married couple filing a joint return. The maximum amount is also reduced by exempt social security and exempt retirement income. Similarly, for public retirement system retirees under age 65, the base for the credit is increased but no change is made in the definition of retirement income. (In the case where one spouse is under 65 and one is over 65, they may elect this treatment or the new provision.) These changes are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement is the same as the House bill and the Senate amendment.

504. Credit for Child Care Expenses

House bill.—Under present law, taxpayers may claim as an itemized deduction expenses incurred for the care of a child or disabled dependent or spouse up to $4,800 a year. The maximum deduction is reduced by one dollar for every two dollars of income in excess of $35,000. Payments to relatives are not deductible.

The House bill converts the deduction to a tax credit of 20 percent of eligible expenditures. It limits the maximum eligible expenses to $2,000 for one dependent and $4,000 for two or more; and eliminates the $35,000 income limit. The bill extends the credit to married couples where one spouse works part-time or is a student and to divorced or separated parents who have custody of a child. The bill also makes payments to relatives who are not dependents of the taxpayer deductible if: (1) they do not live in the taxpayer's home and (2) their pay for child care is subject to social security tax. These changes apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that the credit is refundable and payments to relatives who are members of the taxpayer's household are eligible.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that the credit is not refundable.

505. Sick Pay and Certain Disability Pensions

House bill.—Under present law, an employee may exclude from income up to $100 a week received under wage continuation plans when he is absent from work on account of injury or sickness. Military personnel can exclude from income pensions for personal injuries or sickness paid by the Department of Defense (as well as all Veterans Administration disability compensation).

The House bill repeals the sick pay exclusion and provides an exclusion of up to $5,200 a year for retirees under age 65 who are permanently and totally disabled. The bill reduces this $5,200 exclusion dollar-for-dollar for AGI (including disability income) in excess of $15,000. It also eliminates the exclusion for non-combat related disability pensions for those who joined the armed forces after September 24, 1975, but continues the exemption for V.A. disability compensation or an equivalent amount paid by the Department of Defense. These changes apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment retains the present law sick pay exclusion but adds a dollar-for-dollar phaseout of the exclusion for adjusted gross income (including sick pay) in excess of $15,000. The Senate amendment also includes separate language extending the sick pay provision to civilian Federal employees, regardless of age, who by the date of enactment retired, or were entitled to retire, on disability, and who were either totally or partially disabled by the date of enactment.

In the case of the military, the amendment, like the House bill, eliminates the exclusion for noncombat-related disability pay, and allows disability payments for injuries to civilian government employees resulting from acts of terrorism the same exclusion granted military disability payments for combat-related injuries.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill. The conference agreement also includes a separate Senate provision regarding the exclusion for disability payments for injuries to civilian government employees resulting from acts of terrorism; the provision is included in section 2521, Senate amendment numbered 38.

The conference agreement also includes a clarifying technical amendment applicable to partially disabled individuals who were retired on disability before January 1, 1976, and were entitled to a sick pay exclusion on December 31, 1975. For purposes of the section 72 annuity exclusion, such an individual's annuity starting date shall not be deemed to occur before the beginning of the taxable year in which the taxpayer attains age 65, or before the beginning of an earlier taxable year for which the taxpayer makes an irrevocable election not to seek the benefits of the sick pay exclusion for such year and all subsequent years.

506. Moving Expenses

House bill.—Under present law, a taxpayer may deduct exepnses of up to $2,500 for house-hunting, the sale of a residence, and temporary lodging, related to moving to a new place of work which is 50 miles farther from his former residence than was his former place of work. As a result of the lapse of the moratorium (provided by legislation) on the application of the Tax Reform Act of 1969 with respect to the new moving expense rules in the case of the military, in-kind moving services and moving expense reimbursements for members of the armed forces are includable in income and deductible under the same rules as civilians.

The House bill increases the $2,500 maximum deduction to $3,000 and decreases the 50-mile test to 35 miles. It exempts in-kind or reimbursed moving expenses for members of the armed forces on active duty moved by military orders. The changes apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that it increases the $3,000 maximum to $3,500 and expands the provision for the military to include (a) the cost of moving a spouse to a place in the United States when the member is stationed overseas and (b) the cost of storing personal effects of military personnel who are forced to relocate when such costs are borne by the armed services. The Senate amendment changes apply generally for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976, except that the military provisions apply for years after 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment except that the $3,000 limit of the House bill is adopted. With regard to military moves, the conference agreement also exempts military moves from the time and mileage requirements and excludes from income cash reimbursements or allowances to the extent of expenses actually paid or incurred, as well as all in-kind services provided by the military. The Armed Services are exempted from the reporting requirements under section 82 with regard to in-kind moving services, reimbursements and allowances provided to members. In addition, the conference agreement provides that when a military member is required to relocate and the member's spouse and dependents cannot accompany the member and must move to a different location, all in-kind moving and storage expenses, and reimbursements and allowances (to the extent of moving expenses actually paid or incurred) provided by the military to move the member and the spouse and dependents both to and from their separate locations are excluded from income. In cases where the military moves the member and the member's spouse and dependents to or from separate locations and they incur unreimbursed expenses, their moves are treated as a single move to a new principal place of work for purposes of section 217.

507. Tax Simplification Study by Joint Committee

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law (sec. 8022 of the Code) provides that the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation is to investigate the operation and effects of the Federal system of internal revenue taxes, including studies for the simplification of the income tax. The Joint Committee is to publish its proposals and report the results and any recommendations to the Finance and Ways and Means Committees.

The Senate amendment requires the Joint Committee to conduct a study on "simplifying and indexing the tax laws" (including whether tax rates can be reduced by repealing any or all tax deductions, exemptions or credits). A report is to be submitted to the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees within 18 months of the date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that the report is to be submitted by June 30, 1977.

Section omitted from Senate amendment No. 18:

Treasury Report on Simplification of Income Taxes

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment requires the Secretary of the Treasury to submit a final report on its study on tax simplification (including an analysis of the integration of corporate and individual income taxes) to the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision, as the Treasury Department is planning to submit its report in January 1977.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 19

Business-related individual income tax

601(a). Deductions for Expenses Attributable to Business Use of Homes

House bill.—The House bill provides definitive rules relating to deductions for expenses attributable to the business use of homes. Under the House bill, a taxpayer is not permitted to deduct any expenses attributable to the use of his home for business purposes except to the extent attributable to the portion of the home used exclusively on a regular basis as: (a) the taxpayer's principal place of business, or (b) a place of business which is used for patients, clients, or customers in meeting or dealing with the taxpayer in the normal course of business. Further, in the case of an employee, the business use of the home must be for the convenience of his employer. An exception to the exclusive use test is provided where the dwelling unit is the sole fixed location of a trade or business which consists of selling products at retail and the taxpayer regularly uses a separate identifiable portion of the residence for inventory storage. An overall limitation is provided which limits the amount of the deductions to the income generated by the business activity of the taxpayer in his home. The provision applies after 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except a deduction is allowed for the portion of the dwelling unit which is exclusively used on a regular basis (a) as the sole fixed location of the taxpayer's trade or business of selling goods or services at retail or wholesale, but only if the portion is used in connection with the sale of goods or services, (b) in the case of a separate structure which is not attached to the dwelling unit, in connection with the taxpayer's trade or business, or (c) if the employer provides no office or fixed location for the use of the employee in the employer's trade or business (in connection with such trade or business). In addition, the Senate amendment provides that the business use of home includes in its meaning the use of the home in connection with the management, conservation, or maintenance of property held for the production of income and which is the substantial business of the taxpayer.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill but includes the exception under the Senate amendment for a separate structure exclusively used on a regular basis in connection with the taxpayer's trade or business. In addition, the conference agreement permits the exception for inventory storage to apply in the case of a wholesale business as well as a retail business.

601(b). Rental of Vacation Homes

House bill.—Under present law, there are no definitive rules relating to how much personal use of vacation property will result in the disallowance of losses because the rental activities are not engaged in for profit. The House bill provides a limitation on the amount allowable to a taxpayer for the deductions attributable to the rental of a vacation home if the home is used by a taxpayer for personal purposes in excess of the greater of 2 weeks or 5 percent of the actual business use (that is, its rental time). In this case, the deductions allowed in connection with a vacation home cannot exceed the gross income from the business use of the vacation home, except expenses which are allowable in any event (such as interest and taxes). The provision applies after 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that: (1) one of the tests relating to the determination of personal use is increased from 5 percent to 10 percent of the number of days during the year for which the vacation home is rented; and (2) if a vacation home is actually rented for less than one month during the year, then no business deductions nor income derived from the use of the vacation home are to be taken into account in the taxpayer's return for the year.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but reduces the rental period from less than one month to less than 15 days in the case where neither business deductions nor income from the use of the vacation home is to be taken into account in the taxpayer's return for the year.

602. Deductions for Attending Foreign Conventions

House bill.—Generally, to be deductible under present law, traveling expenses (domestic and foreign) must be ordinary and necessary in the conduct of the taxpayer's business and directly attributable to the trade or business. If a trip is primarily related to the taxpayer's business, the entire traveling expenses (including food and lodging) to and from a destination are deductible. If a trip is primarily personal in nature, the traveling expenses to and from the destination are not deductible even if the taxpayer engages in business activities while at the destination. With respect to expenses incurred in attending a convention or other meeting, deductibility depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case.

The House bill modifies the facts and circumstances test under existing law and provides definitive rules for the deductibility for expenses incurred in attending certain conventions or similar meetings. Deductions would be allowed for expenses incurred in attending not more than two conventions, educational seminars, or similar meetings outside the United States, its possessions and the Trust Territory of the Pacific.

The amount of the deduction for transportation expenses to and from these foreign conventions could not exceed the cost of airfare based on coach or economy class charges. Transportation expenses would be deductible in full only if more than one-half of the total days of the trip (excluding the days of transportation to and from the site of the convention) are devoted to business-related activities. If less than one-half of the total days of the trip are devoted to business-related activities, a deduction would be allowed for transportation expenses only in the ratio of the business time to total time.

In addition, deductions for subsistence expenses, such as meals, lodging, and other ordinary and necessary expenses, paid or incurred while attending the convention would be limited to the fixed amount of per diem allowed to government employees at the location where the convention is held. However, in order to deduct subsistence expenses up to this limitation for a day, there must generally be at least 6 hours of business-related activities scheduled daily (or 3 hours for a deduction for one-half day) and the taxpayer must attend two-thirds of these activities. The provision applies to conventions held after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment provides that no deduction is to be allowed for expenses allocable to a convention, seminar or other meeting held outside the North American area unless, taking certain factors into account, it is more reasonable for the meeting to be held outside the North American area than within it. Generally, this requirement would be satisfied if the application of these factors demonstrated a compelling need to hold the meeting outside the North American area. In addition, no deduction would be allowed for a convention, etc., held on a cruise ship. The amendment applies generally to meetings held after June 30, 1976. However, it does not apply to any trip which begins before 1978, if it is established that the meeting was publicly announced before 1976 and that accommodations for the meeting were booked before 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill with two modifications and the addition of certain reporting requirements. The House bill rule limiting the deduction for travel expenses to an amount not in excess of the lowest coach or economy rate charged by any commercial airline is modified to allow a deduction for reasonable costs of travel within the United States. Additionally, in the case where the taxpayer travels coach or economy class on a regularly scheduled flight operated by a commercial airline, the conferees intend that the deductible transportation cost taken into account will generally be limited to the coach or economy rate charged by the airline.

The conference agreement provides that no deduction is to be allowed unless the taxpayer complies with certain reporting requirements in addition to present law substantiation requirements. Under these reporting requirements, the taxpayer must furnish information indicating the total days of the trip exclusive of the transportation days to and from the convention, the number of hours of each day that he devoted to business-related activities, attach a program or agenda of the convention activities (and a brochure describing the convention, if available), and furnish any other information required by regulations. In addition, the taxpayer must attach a statement signed by an appropriate officer of the organization to his income tax return which must include a schedule of the business activities of each convention day, the number of hours of business-related activities that the taxpayer attended each day and any other information required by regulations.

Under the conference agreement the provision is to apply to conventions, seminars and similar meetings which take place after December 31, 1976.

603. Qualified Stock Options

House bill.—The House bill repeals qualified stock option treatment and subjects qualified stock options to the same rules as presently apply in the case of nonqualified options. The bill generally applies to options granted after September 23, 1973, but contains certain transition rules for options granted after that date under preexisting plans.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is generally the same as the House bill, including the transition rules, but applies to options granted after May 20, 1976. In addition, however, the Senate amendment contains a provision which allows an employee to elect early valuation of an option which does have a readily ascertainable fair market value at the time it is granted. If the election is made, the option is to be valued and be subject to tax at the time it is granted. Otherwise, tax recognition is to be postponed until the option is exercised.

Conference agreement.—Under the conference agreement, the qualified stock option provisions are repealed. The additional provision in the Senate amendment dealing with an election for early valuation of an option which does not have a readily ascertainable fair market value when granted is not included in the bill (but see discussion below.) The agreement adopts the effective date of the Senate amendment. In interpreting the transition rules, the conferees agree with the statement in the Senate Finance Committee Report (p. 164) that if a corporation adopted an option plan in 1974 and is reorganized in 1977 into a holding company with one or more operating subsidiaries, the holding company may adopt the 1974 option plan and continue to grant qualified stock options to the extent permissible had the reorganization not occurred.

Under the conference agreement, for the future, all options are to be governed under the rules which apply under present law for nonqualified stock options. This means that if the option has a "readily ascertainable fair market value" at the time it is granted, then the value of the option will constitute ordinary income to the employee at that time, but any gain later realized by the employee upon the sale of any stock acquired under the option will generally be treated as capital gain. On the other hand, if the option does not have a readily ascertainable fair market value at the time it is granted, it would not constitute income to the employee at that time, but if the option is subsequently exercised, and if the fair market value of the stock exceeds the option price, this excess will constitute ordinary income to the employee at the time the option is exercised.

The conferees intend that in applying these rules for the future, the Service will make every reasonable effort to determine a fair market value for an option (i.e., in cases where similar property would be valued for estate tax purposes) where the employee irrevocably elects (by reporting the option as income on his tax return or in some other manner to be specified in regulations) to have the option valued at the time it is granted (particularly in the case of an option granted for a new business venture). The conferees intend that the Service will promulgate regulations and rulings setting forth as specifically as possible the criteria which will be weighed in valuing an option which the employee elects to value at the time it is granted.

The conferees intend that under these rules, the value of an option would be determined under all the facts and circumstances of a particular case. Among other factors that would be taken into account would be the value of the stock underlying the option (to the extent that this could be ascertained), the length of the option period (the longer the period, the greater the chance the underlying stock might increase in value), the earnings potential of the corporation, and the success (or lack of success) of similar ventures. Corporate assets, including patents, trade secrets and knowhow would also have to be taken into account.

The conferees anticipate that under the Service's rules, certain options, such as those traded publicly, would be treated as having a readily ascertainable fair market value, regardless of whether the employee makes an election. However, the regulations could provide that in certain other cases the option would ordinarily not be valued at the time it is granted unless the employee so elects.

604. Deduction for Legislators' Travel Expenses Away From Home

House bill.—Under present law, the place of residence of a Member of Congress within the Congressional district he represents in Congress is considered his tax home. However, amounts expended by the Member within the tax year for living expenses away from home are not deductible in excess of $3,000. The House bill modifies the $3,000 limitation presently allowed to Members of Congress to provide that deductions by a Member of Congress would be limited to an amount determined by the IRS. The IRS is to establish an annual amount taking into account the number of days that the Members are away from home, the cost of living in Washington, D.C., and the amount normally allowed businessmen in similar circumstances.

The rule under present law (as described above) for determining the tax home of a Member of Congress does not apply in the case of a State legislator. The tax home of a State legislator is determined by taking into account a number of factors, such as; (a) the total time ordinarily spent by the taxpayer at each location, (b) the degree of business activity at each location, (c) the amount of income ordinarily spent by the taxpayer at each location, etc. The House bill provides that the tax home of a State legislator is his place of residence within the legislative district he represents. The allowable deduction for living expenses is limited to an amount determined by the IRS. The IRS is to determine a daily amount taking into account the cost of living at the place where the State legislature meets and the amounts normally allowed businessmen under similar circumstances. A State legislator is allowed to deduct up to this daily amount multiplied by the number of days of his legislative participation during the calendar year.

This provision generally applies for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1974. For taxable years beginning before December 31, 1974, a State legislator can elect to have the above rules apply. If an election is made, the legislator is to be treated as having expended for living expenses an amount equal to the daily per diem allowed U.S. Government employees of the Executive branch multiplied by the number of days the State legislature was in session. However, the total amount of deductions allowable cannot exceed the amount already claimed on the State legislator's tax return for the year in question.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment deletes the provision in the House bill relating to Members of Congress; thus, the present $3,000 limitation is retained.

In the case of State legislators, the Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that it (1) provides that the Secretary of Labor (rather than the IRS) is to establish the daily amount allowable as a deduction for State legislators, and (2) modifies the definition of a legislative day for taxable years beginning on or before January 1, 1976, to include any day in which the State legislature was not in session for a period of 4 consecutive days or less.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment in the case of Members of Congress. In the case of State legislators, the conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but only for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1976.

605. Nonbusiness Guaranties

House bill.—Where a taxpayer has a loss arising from the guaranty of a loan, he would receive the same treatment as where he has a loss from a loan which he makes directly. If the guaranty arose out of the guarantor's trade or business, the loss would be treated as an ordinary loss. If the guaranty were a transaction entered for profit by the guarantor (but not as part of his trade or business), the loss would be treated as a short-term capital loss. The provision applies to taxable years beginning after 1975.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill. This provision applies to losses for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975, in connection with guaranties made after that date.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 20

701. Accumulation Trusts

House bill.—Under present law, distributions by a trust of previously accumulated income are taxed substantially the same as if they were distributed when earned, i.e., "thrown back" to the year earned. The tax on the distributions of previously accumulated income is computed under either the "exact method" or the "short-cut" method. Under the "exact method", the tax on the accumulation distribution is the sum of the additional taxes that would have been payable by the beneficiary if the income had been distributed when earned and if the tax on the beneficiary had been entirely recomputed. Under the "short-cut" method, the tax on the accumulation distribution is computed by averaging the accumulation distribution over the number of years during which the accumulated income was earned by the trust, including this average amount in the beneficiary's income for each of the 3 immediate prior years, and then multiplying the average additional tax for those years by the number of years during which the accumulated income was earned. Under both methods, the beneficiary is entitled to a credit for taxes paid by the trust on the accumulation distribution. The "throw-back" rules also apply to distributions of accumulated capital gains.

The House bill repeals the "exact method" of computing the tax on accumulation distributions. It also modifies the "short-cut" method by throwing back the average accumulation distribution to 3 of the 5 preceding years, excluding those years with the highest and lowest incomes. It does not permit refunds of excess taxes paid by the trust. In addition, the House bill provides that income accumulated prior to the beneficiary's attaining the age of 21 and the years a beneficiary was not in existence are not subject to the throw-back rule. The House bill also provides special rules for multiple trusts. Finally, the House bill repeals the capital gain throw-back rules, but taxes the "built-in" gain on sales occurring within 2 years of the transfer to the trust as short-term capital gain. The provision applies to distributions made in taxable years beginning after 1974.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment generally follows the House bill, except that instead of a 2-year holding period, the trust is taxed at the grantor's rate brackets on "built-in" gain on sales or exchanges occurring within 2 years of the transfer to the trust. In addition, the Senate amendment delays the House effective date one year so that the modifications apply to distributions made in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975. An exception is made to apply the new rules to distributions actually made after 1975 in those cases where the distributions are deemed to have been made before 1977. The special rule for gain on property transfererd to a trust applies to transfers made after May 21, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that it deletes one of the effective date provisions in the Senate amendment which would have made the modifications in the accumulation distribution rules applicable to deemed distributions made before 1977, if the actual distributions were made after 1975.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 21

CAPITAL FORMATION

801. Extension of $100,000 Limitation on Used Property for the Investment Credit

House bill.—Prior to 1975, up to $50,000 of the cost of used property could be taken into account as qualified investment for purposes of the investment tax credit for a taxable year. The Tax Reduction Act of 1975 increased the amount to $100,000 for 1975 and 1976. The House bill extends the limit of $100,000 on used property for 4 additional years, through December 31, 1980.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment makes permanent the increased limitation of $100,000 on used property.

802(a). Extension of 10-percent Investment Credit

House bill.—Present law provides a permanent investment credit of 7 percent (4 percent for certain utility property) for qualified investment. The Tax Reduction Act of 1975 increased the credit to 10 percent for all qualified property (including utility property) through December 31, 1976.

The House bill extends the 10-percent credit for 4 years, through December 31, 1980.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment makes permanent the 10-percent credit.

802(b). First-in-First-out Treatment of Investment Credits

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law provides in general that the amount of investment credit used in any year cannot exceed $25,000 of tax liability plus 50 percent of any liability in excess of $25,000. A 3-year carryback and 7-year carryforward is then applied to credits which are not used because of the tax liability limitation. (A 10-year carryforward is available for pre-1971 credits.) Generally, investment credits earned in a particular year are applied first to the tax liability for that year, after which carryovers and carrybacks of unused credits from other years may be applied.

Under the Senate amendment, credits carried over are used first and then credits earned currently are used; after that, any carryback credits may be applied. If there is more than one carryforward or carryback to a particular year, the oldest credit is generally used first. The amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

803. ESOP Investment Credit Provisions

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law an extra percentage point of investment credit (11 percent rather than 10 percent) is allowed where the additional credit amount is contributed to an employee stock ownership plan (ESOP). The additional credit expires after 1976. The Senate amendment increases the additional ESOP credit to 2 percentage points permanently, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

The Senate amendment also makes a series of modifications in the case of ESOPs. It (1) prevents flow-through of the investment credit contributed by a public utility to an ESOP; (2) permits employer securities to be contributed to an ESOP as the credit is allowed rather than when it is claimed; (3) provides that future contributions under the investment credit rules may be reduced if investment credits which have been contributed to an ESOP are recaptured or disallowed; (4) permits use of stock of "brother-sister" corporations, "second-tier" subsidiaries and corporations which would be affiliates except for nonvoting preferred stock to be contributed to an ESOP under the investment credit rules; (5) excludes employer stock held by an ESOP for purposes of determining whether corporations are sufficiently affiliated to permit the filing of consolidated returns; (6) permits ESOPs to be considered permanent plans even though contributions are contingent upon the availability of the additional investment credit; (7) doubles the dollar amount the overall limitation on contributions permitted to be made to an ESOP and provides that employee compensation for purposes of the ESOP rules is the same as that under the overall limitations; (8) permits a limited amount of "start up" and administrative expenses to be charged against the additional investment credit contributed to an ESOP; and (9) permits an employer to qualify for the additional 1975 investment credit if the additional credit is contributed to an ESOP not later than 90 days after date of enactment. These nine provisions are generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1974.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but limits the additional credit program to qualified investments made before January 1, 1981, and limits the additional credit generally to 1 percentage point. An additional one-half percentage point is available only if the first percentage point is contributed to the ESOP, and only to the extent the one-half percent is matched by employee contributions to the ESOP. Under the conference agreement, separate accounting would be required for matching employee and employer contributions. Continuing present law treatment, an employer contribution for a taxable year in excess of the amount attributable to the additional credit allowed for such year is deductible for that year, subject to the usual rules for deduction of contributions to employee plans.

Under the conference agreement, employer and employee contributions to an investment credit ESOP are subject to overall limitations on contributions and benefits under tax-qualified pensions, etc. plans. These limitations may restrict the amount of additional investment credit allowable.

The conferees intend that employee contributions can be taken into account for the additional credit if they are contributed to the plan before the end of the year in which the credit is allowed or if the contributions are pledged by the employees to be paid within 2 years after the close of that year and the pledge is made before the return is filed. If employee contributions are made in excess of the amount pledged and matched with employer contributions, additional credit can be claimed by the employer for the year the property giving rise to the credit was placed in service. Under the agreement, employee contributions made under the matching rules are to be invested in employer securities under the same rules that apply to employee contributions.

If the plan provides, the agreement permits funds contributed by the employer to be withdrawn from an investment credit ESOP (1) to refund employer contributions which are not matched by employee contributions within the period specified, or (2) to permit the employer to recover from the ESOP any portion of the employer's contribution which is recaptured from the employer under the investment credit rules (for example, where the property for which the credit is claimed is disposed of prematurely). The conferees intend that the withdrawal of employer contributions made under the one-half percent credit rules because they are not matched by employee contributions or a withdrawal of employer contributions under the recapture rules should not cause the plan to be considered as other than for the exclusive benefit of employees and that employee rights to employer-derived benefits under the plan should not be considered forfeitable merely because employer contributions of investment credit may be withdrawn under the matching or recapture rules. Recovery of recaptured investment credit would not be permitted unless the employer contributions for each year are separately accounted for (all contributions made before enactment of the Act could be aggregated for this purpose).

Under the conference agreement, employee funds contributed to an ESOP are subject to employee withdrawal unless they are matched by employer contributions under the one-half percent credit rules. For example, if matching employer contributions cannot be made because of the overall limitations on benefits and contributions (sec. 415 of the Code) the unmatched employee contributions would be refunded to the employee (unless he instructs the plan to the contrary).

Also, under the agreement employee contributions to an investment credit ESOP are subject to the same antidiscrimination rules as apply to employee contributions under a tax-qualified pension plan, and matched employee contributions are subject to the same restrictions on distribution as employer contributions (generally, no withdrawal is permitted for 84 months).

Employee contributions may not be compulsory; that is, employee contributions may not be made a condition of employment or a condition of participation in the plan. Of course, the level of employer-derived benefits under the matching rules may depend upon employee contributions.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on items (1) through (8) above, but provides that the non-flow through rule applies to credits claimed for taxable years after 1975. The agreement also provides that on recapture a deduction for the employer or recovery of the recaptured contribution from the ESOP are available as additional alternatives. To use the option of recapture from an ESOP for any year's contribution, the ESOP must establish separate accounts for that year's contribution. Under (8), the ESOP may pay "start up" and ongoing administrative expenses, but an annual ceiling of $100,000 was agreed to with respect to ongoing expenses (in addition to the limits by the Senate amendment). The grace period under (9) was not agreed to. The conferees agreed that contributions could be made to a plan contingent upon an Internal Revenue Service determination that the plan qualifies under the investment credit and employee plan rules.

The conferees understand that some employers may have reduced their estimated tax payments in anticipation of the enactment of the 90-day grace period provision (item (9)) or anti-flow through provisions of the Senate amendment. Because that provision was not agreed to, the agreement provides that no penalties are to be imposed for underpayment of the tax where the underpayment is caused by the taxpayer's inability to avail itself of the grace period or anti-flow through provisions.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on items (1) through (8) above, but provides under (3) that on recapture a deduction for the employer and recapture from the ESOP are available as alternatives. Under (8), the ongoing expenses may not exceed $100,000 (in addition to the limits in the Senate amendment). The flow-through provisions under (1), will be effective only for taxable years ending after December 31, 1975.

804. Investment Credit for Movie and Television Films

House bill.—The House bill provides that for the future, as a general rule, taxpayers will receive ⅔'s of a full investment credit for all their films regardless of the actual useful life of any particular film. For the past, taxpayers may elect to take a 40-percent compromise credit for all of their films, regardless of the actual useful life or foreign use of any particular film. Alternatively, taxpayers may determine their investment credit on a film-by-film basis.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is generally the same as the House bill. However, the amendment clarifies that the investment credit is to be available for educational films as well as entertainment films. It also deletes a restriction imposed by the House bill on investment credit carryovers. Unlike the House bill, the Senate amendment permits participations to be included in the credit base of an 80 percent or more U.S. produced film, but not in excess of (a) $1 million with respect to any one individual for any one film and (b) not in excess of the lesser of (i) 50 percent of participations qualifying under rule (a) or (ii) 25 percent of the production costs of the taxpayer's films for the year. The amendment also provides that any taxpayer who filed a petition in a court by January 1, 1976, may have his investment credit for prior years determined under present law (rather than under the rules of the bill) if he elects present law treatment within 30 days after the date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except in two respects. First, in the case of participations the conference agreement provides one-half of the amount of participations permitted to be included in the credit base by the Senate amendment. As a result, under the conference agreement, participations are limited to the lesser of (a) $1,000,000 with respect to any one individual for any one film, but (b) not in excess of the lesser of (i) 25 percent of participations qualifying under rule (a) or (ii) 12½ percent of the production costs of the taxpayer's films for the year. Second, a taxpayer who wishes to elect present law treatment for prior years may do so within 90 days from the date of enactment if the taxpayer had filed a petition in a court by January 1, 1976.

In addition, the conferees wish to clarify that under certain circumstances, it may be possible for the rights to the film to be leased under section 48(d) before the film is placed in service. However, it is intended that this right is to be available only where the lessee acquires full rights to exploit the movie or film for its estimated useful life through a particular medium or in a particular geographic area; it is not to be available where the lessee is precluded (by law, regulation or government action) from acquiring all rights to commercially exploit the film or tape.

805. Investment Tax Credit for Certain Vessels

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under current law, the tax on income deposited into a capital construction fund (established under section 21 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1970) for the construction of certain vessels is deferred. When the funds are withdrawn to purchase a qualified vessel, there is no tax basis in the purchased vessel to the extent of the withdrawal. This reduces the amount of investment credit available on the purchased vessel. The Senate amendment provides that the amount of investment tax credit is not to be reduced because of a deposit in, or qualified withdrawal from, a capital construction fund. The Senate amendment takes effect for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1969.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement provides for an investment credit of one-half the regular credit on the tax-deferred amounts withdrawn from the capital construction fund which are used to purchase qualified vessels. In addition, the conferees intend that taxpayers are to have the right to obtain a court determination as to whether they are, under already existing law, also eligible for the other one-half of the regular investment credit. The conferees intend that no inferences be drawn either way on this issue from the action taken here.

If a taxpayer claims the full investment credit on its tax return it is expected that the Internal Revenue Service will provide, by regulations, procedures which will require the taxpayer to indicate on its return that the full investment credit is being claimed. This will alert the Internal Revenue Service as to the position taken by the taxpayer on this point. If the IRS asserts a deficiency in this case, the taxpayer will have the option of pursuing its claim for the full credit in the tax court. In addition the taxpayer may file a claim for a refund which would allow the taxpayer to pursue its claim with the Court of Claims or in the District Courts.

Where a taxpayer purchases a ship with borrowed funds and uses the capital construction fund to pay off the indebtedness, there initially would be allowed a full investment credit and then subsequently there is to be a recapture of no more than 50 percent of the amount of the investment credit taken on the purchase price of the ship representing the indebtedness which is being liquidated with tax deferred amounts from the capital construction fund.

The conference agreement applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975. This is not intended to provide any inference as to the application of existing law with respect to the availability of the credit for prior (as well as future) years.

806(a). Net Operating Loss Carryover and Carryback Election

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law provides that taxpayers in general are allowed to carry a business net operating loss back to the preceding 3 years and forward to the 5 years following the year of the loss. Differing carryback and/or carryover periods are allowed for certain specific types of taxpayers and certain types of losses.

Under the Senate amendment, taxpayers who are presently allowed a 3-year carryback (business taxpayers in general, regulated transportation corporations and insurance companies) may elect to convert their carryback period into 3 additional carryover years. This year extended carryover election will also apply to losses which occur during the carryover period for the loss to which the election first applies, but may be revoked for subsequent losses. The amendment applies to net operating losses incurred in tax years ending in 1976 or later.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement provides two additional carryover years for business taxpayers in general and insurance companies (making a 7-year carryover), as well as for regulated transportation corporations (making a 9-year carryover). In addition, all taxpayers presently entitled to carryback periods for their net operating losses may elect to forego the entire carryback period for a net operating loss in any taxable year. This conference agreement applies to net operating losses incurred in tax years ending in 1976 or later.

806(b). Limitations on Net Operating Loss Carryovers

Senate amendment.—Present law provides that where new owners buy over 50 percent of the stock of a loss corporation during a 2-year period, its loss carryovers from prior years are allowed in full if the company continues to conduct its prior trade or business. It may add or begin a new business, however, and apply loss carryovers incurred by the former owners against profits from the new business (unless tax avoidance can be shown to be the principal purpose for the acquisition). If the same business is not continued, however, loss carryovers are completely lost. In the case of a tax-free reorganization, loss carryovers are allowed on a declining scale. If the former owners of the loss company receive 20 percent or more of the value of the stock of the acquiring company, the loss carryovers are allowed in full. For each percentage point less than 20 which the former owners receive, the loss carryover is reduced by 5 percentage points. It is immaterial whether the business of the loss company is continued after the reorganization.

The Senate amendment provides parallel rules for taxable acquisitions and tax-free acquisitions of a loss company. In both cases, the test for carryovers will no longer depend on whether the loss company continues its same trade or business. The required continuity of ownership by the former owners of a loss company is increased to 40 percent. For each percentage point less than 40 which the owners of the loss company get (or retain), the allowable loss carryover will be reduced by 2½ percentage points. These rules apply both where new owners take over a loss company in a taxable purchase of stock or in a tax-free reorganization.

Several technical revisions to present law are also made:

(1) The transactions which trigger the loss limitations are expanded.

(2) The limitations can no longer be escaped by using a controlled subsidiary of a profit company to acquire a loss company.

(3) The period in which taxable purchases of a loss company's stock may bring the limitations into play is increased from 2 to 3 years.

(4) The losses affected by the limitations are broadened to include operating losses in the acquisition year itself.

(5) In a reorganization the former owners of a loss company must receive a participating stock interest in the acquiring company (nonvoting preferred stock will not be sufficient).

(6) The limitations will now apply to stock-for-stock ("B") reorganizations not now covered.

The Senate amendment applies generally to reorganizations and other changes in stock ownership occurring after the date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with a series of technical revisions. The schedule under which net operating loss carryovers will be limited following a reorganization, purchase of stock, or other change in ownership of a loss corporation is revised. Under the revision, for each percentage point increase in stock ownership above 60 and up to 80 which new owners buy in a loss company, the loss carryover will be reduced by 3½ percentage points. Above an 80-point increase in percentage points, the carryover will be reduced by 1½ percentage points for each 1 percentage point increase within that range. A parallel change is made in the continuity of ownership required for the former owners of a loss company following a taxfree reorganization.

Under the revision, the continuity of ownership requirements are to be measured by reference to the ownership by the former owners of a loss company of the lesser of participating stock of the loss company (or, in the case of a reorganization, of the acquiring company) or of the fair market value of all the stock of that company.

Where stock of a loss company changes hands other than in a taxfree reorganization, the group of new owners whose stock ownership causes a reduction in loss carryovers is increased from 10 to 15 persons. The transactions which trigger the limitations are also expanded to cover several technical gaps in present law, such as cases where a new investor acquires a partnership interest directly from a partnership (as well as from other partners) which owns stock in the loss corporation and where two or more partnerships merge with each other.

Consistent with the new 40-percent continuity of ownership rule, loss carryovers will not be reduced from any acquisition year (or from any earlier or later taxable year) of a loss company if the new owners owned at least 40 percent of the stock of the loss company during all of the last half of any such year. Exceptions are also made from the new purchase rules for start-up losses of a newly formed corporation, exchanges in which creditors of a financially troubled company take over the equity, recapitalizations (including changes in the ownership of a family corporation), and acquisitions of employer stock by key employees or by a qualified profit-sharing plan or employee stock ownership plan. Acquisitions of stock by gift or inheritance are also expected.

In the case of taxfree reorganizations, the conference agreement adds a rule to cover a situation under which the new rules could otherwise be escaped by using a holding company (which owns one or more loss companies as controlled subsidiaries) as a party to the reorganization. Another rule is added to prevent avoidance of the new rules by combining a taxable purchase of stock with a later taxfree reorganization involving a corporation controlled by the shareholder who made the purchase. Special rules are added for the technical problems which arise in limiting carryovers following a "B"-type (stock-for stock) reorganization. The common ownership exception in present law (sec. 382(b)(3)) is revised so that this rule will operate in a more realistic fashion.

The conference agreement also changes the definition of "stock" in present law in order to limit the present exception for certain kinds of preferred stock to fixed-dividend stock which is not convertible into other stock and the redemption and liquidation rights of which are limited generally to paid-in capital or par value. The term "participating stock" is also redefined.

The conferees agree with the discussion of the Libson Shops case on page 206 of the Senate Finance Committee report. The conferees intend that no inference should be drawn from that discussion concerning the applicability or nonapplicability of the Libson Shops case, either generally or as to specific types of transactions, in determining net operating loss carryovers to tax years governed by present law. (The conferees do not intend the amendments in the bill to affect the "continuity of business enterprise" requirement, which the courts and the Treasury have long established as a condition for basic nonrecognition treatment of a corporate reorganization (see sec. 368–1(b) of the regulations)). The conferees also agree with the discussion on page 206 of the Senate report concerning the general tax avoidance test in section 269 of the Code.

In order to allow a reasonable time for the Internal Revenue Service to issue regulations under the new rules, the conference agreement delays the effective date of the new rules generally for one year. The revised rules will apply, in the case of taxfree reorganizations, to reorganizations pursuant to plans adopted by one or more of the parties on or after January 1, 1978. (A reorganization plan will be considered adopted on the date the board of directors adopts the plan or recommends its adoption to the shareholders, or on the date the shareholders approve the plan, whichever is earlier). If the new limitations affect a reorganization occurring in 1978, net operating losses incurred in 1977 will not be limited, but carryovers of such losses to 1978 and later years may be limited.

In the case of purchases of stock of a loss company and other acquisitions subject to sec. 382(a), the new rules take effect for taxable years of a loss corporation beginning after June 30, 1978. However, the "lookback" period under these rules may be made to earlier taxable years. The earliest lookback point, however, is January 1, 1968. For example; section 382(a) as amended will take effect for a calendar year corporation during calendar 1979. However, the first "lookback" period under the new rules will be a transitional 24-month period from December 31, 1979, back to January 1, 1978. In 1980, when the new rules become fully effective, the lookback period will cover three years so that at the end of 1980, reference will be made back to the first day of that year and then back to January 1, 1979, and then to January 1, 1978.

In this example the present rules of section 382(a) will govern the allowance of loss carryovers of the company to its calendar years 1977 and 1978. The new rules will govern loss carryovers from 1978 and earlier years to 1979 and later years. Although the new rules will thus not actually limit losses in this example until 1979, the new limitations will affect loss carryovers to 1979 from earlier years. Also, changes in stock ownership occurring during 1978 will be taken into account as part of the lookback period from December 31, 1979, for purposes of testing loss carryovers to 1979 and later years.

For a fiscal year corporation whose taxable year begins, for example, on July 1, the rules of present law will govern loss carryovers to fiscal 1977 and 1978. The new rules will govern loss carryovers to fiscal 1979, and for this purpose changes in stock ownership measured by reference back to stock ownership on July 1, 1978, and on January 1, 1978, will be taken into account.

807. Small Commercial Fishing Vessel Construction Reserves

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under current law, domestic shipping vessels must be of 5 net tons or more to be eligible for the capital construction fund. The Senate amendment reduces the minimum weight displacement required to 2 net tons or more, to be effective upon date of enactment.

SECTIONS OMITTED IN SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 21: EXTENSION OF EXPIRING INVESTMENT CREDITS

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law generally provides a 3-year carryback and a 7-year carryforward of unused investment credits. (Unused credits earned before 1970 may be carried forward 10 years.)

The Senate amendment extends for two additional years investment credits which would otherwise expire in 1976.

Credit for Artist's Donations of Own Work to Charitable Organizations

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, an artist may deduct only the basis (generally, the out-of-pocket expenses) in art works which he creates and which he contributes to charities.

The Senate amendment allows an artist to claim a 30-percent credit for the full value (up to $35,000 value annually) of charitable contributions of his own literary, musical or artistic compositions. The credit may not exceed the tax on related income (aggregated over all prior years) from the sale of art works; nor may it offset in any one year more than the greater of $2,500 of income tax liability or 50 percent of income tax liability. Contributions in excess of the maximum amount eligible for the credit may be carried forward 5 years. No credit is allowed for works produced as a public employee. The amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 22

901. Small Business Provisions

House bill.—Prior to the 1975 Tax Reduction Act, corporate taxable income was subject to a 22-percent normal tax and a 26-percent surtax, with a surtax exemption of $25,000. The Tax Reduction Act and the Revenue Adjustment Act increased the surtax exemption to $50,000 and reduced the normal tax to 20 percent on the first $25,000 of taxable income. These provisions expired on July 1, 1976. The House bill extends the reduction in corporate tax rate and the increase in the surtax exemption through December 31, 1977.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment makes permanent the changes in corporate tax rates and increase in surtax exemption. In addition it applies these changes to mutual insurance companies effective for taxable years ending after December 31, 1974.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but with the House expiration date of December 31, 1977.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 23: CHANGE IN THE TREATMENT OF FOREIGN INCOME

1011. Income Earned Abroad by U.S. Citizens Living or Residing Abroad

House bill—Under present law U.S. citizens working abroad may exclude from their income up to $20,000 of earned income ($25,000 in some cases). U.S. citizens may claim credit directly against U.S. tax for the foreign taxes paid on the excluded earned income. Any employee is entitled to exclude from gross income lodging furnished by the employer on the business premises if the employee is required to accept it as a condition of employment.

The House bill generally phases out the exclusion over 4 years (except for employees of U.S. charitable organizations who work abroad), and provides in lieu thereof a deduction for individuals who incur expenses in providing education for their children and an exclusion for the value of employer-supplied municipal-type services. Individuals working on foreign construction projects do not have the exclusion reduced during the phaseout period. The amount of foreign taxes paid on income which is eligible for the exclusion would not be allowed as a foreign tax credit against U.S. income tax. The House bill applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment retains the earned income exclusion subject to the following modifications: (1) foreign taxes paid on income which is eligible for the exclusion would not be allowed as a foreign tax credit against U.S. income tax (same as House bill): (2) income derived beyond the income eligible for exclusion would be subject to U.S. tax at the higher rate brackets which would apply if the excluded income were also subject to tax; and (3) income earned abroad which is received outside of the country in which earned in order to avoid tax in that country would be ineligible for the exclusion. The Senate amendment also provides an exclusion for income attributable to certain housing which is either furnished to the employee by the employer or reimbursed by the employer. Under the Senate amendment a taxpayer may make a permanent election not to have the earned income exclusion apply in the year of the election and all subsequent years.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that (1) the earned income exclusion is limited to $20,000 for all employees of U.S. charitable organizations and is reduced to $15,000 for all other taxpayers and (2) the special exclusion for housing is eliminated.

1012. Income Tax Treatment of Nonresident Alien Individuals Who Are Married to Citizens or Residents of the United States

House bill.—Under present law, a joint return may not be made by a husband and wife if either one of them at any time during the taxable year was a nonresident alien. If a husband and wife are subject to community property rules, one-half of the earned income of one spouse is treated as being the income of the other spouse and is not subject to U.S. taxation if the other spouse is a nonresident alien and if the income is from foreign sources. The House bill provides that a U.S. citizen or resident married to a nonresident alien would be allowed to file a joint return provided that an election is made by both individuals to be taxed on their worldwide income. Where the election to be taxed on worldwide income is not made, certain community property laws are to be made inapplicable for income tax purposes. The provision applies to taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1975, in the case of an election, otherwise to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill. In addition, a modification is made to the general requirement that nonresident aliens file estimated tax returns by April 15 of the year in question, although they have until June 15 to file the income tax return for the previous year. The Senate amendment provides that in the case of nonresident alien individuals not subject to wage withholding, the due date for filing the estimated tax return is not to be any earlier than the due date for the tax return for the previous year. The Senate amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976, except that individuals would be allowed to file joint returns for all open years beginning after December 31, 1971.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that the effective date for joint returns follows the House date of taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1975.

1013. Foreign Trusts Having One or More United States Beneficiaries To Be Taxed Currently to Grantor

House bill.—Under present law, a trust is taxed in a manner similar to nonresident alien individuals if it is considered to be a foreign trust. It is not taxed on its foreign source income, but distributions to a U.S. taxpayer from a foreign trust are taxed basically in the same manner as distributions from a domestic trust. A foreign trust created by a U.S. person must include capital gains (without the sec. 1202 deduction) in distributable net income; however, the beneficiary is entitled to the section 1202 deduction.

Under the House bill, a U.S. person who transfers property to a foreign trust is treated as the owner of such property and taxed currently for each taxable year during which such trust has a U.S. beneficiary. In addition, all foreign trusts must include capital gains (without the sec. 1202 deduction) in distributable net income. However, the undistributed net income remaining as of December 31, 1975, shall be redetermined with the section 1202 deduction. The provision applies to taxable years ending after December 31, 1975, but only for trusts created after May 21, 1974, and transfers of property after May 21, 1974. However, the provisions dealing with capital gains of foreign trusts apply to taxable years ending after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that employee trusts described in Code section 404(a)(4) are excluded. The Senate amendment applies to taxable years ending after December 31, 1976, but only for trusts created after May 21, 1974, and transfers of property after May 21, 1974. The effective date of the capital gains provision is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that the effective date of the House bill is adopted.

1014. Interest Charge on Accumulation Distributions From Foreign Trusts

House bill.—Under present law there is no interest charge on accumulation distributions from a foreign trust. The House bill imposes an interest charge in the form of an additional tax on beneficiaries receiving taxable accumulation distributions from foreign trusts. The additional tax is 6 percent of the tax otherwise imposed with respect to the distribution for the average number of years during which the amounts were earned. No charge is imposed for the period before January 1, 1976. The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that no interest charge is imposed for the period before January 1, 1977. The Senate amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

1015. Excise Tax on Transfers of Property to Foreign Persons To Avoid Federal Income Tax

House bill.—Under present law, an excise tax of 27½ percent is imposed on the amount of the appreciation of stock or securities transferred to foreign entities. The House bill imposes an excise tax of 35 percent on the amount of the unrecognized appreciation of all property transferred to foreign entities. The provision applies to transfers made after October 2, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except for the addition of an election to recognize gain in lieu of paying the excise tax.

1021. Amendment of Provision Relating to Investment in U.S. Property by Controlled Foreign Corporations

House bill.—Under present law, a U.S. shareholder of a controlled foreign corporation is taxed on the undistributed earnings and profits of the corporation to the extent of the annual increase of its investment in U.S. property. Investment in U.S. property includes the acquisition by a controlled foreign corporation of any tangible property located in the U.S., or stock of a domestic corporation or obligations of a U.S. person (even though unrelated to the investor).

The House bill redefines U.S. property to include only stock and obligations of a U.S. shareholder of the controlled foreign corporation and tangible property which is leased to, or used by, a U.S. shareholder regardless of where used. The provision applies generally to taxable years of foreign corporations beginning after December 31, 1974. In addition an election is provided under which taxpayers could exclude from the definition of U.S. property investments made in property used on the U.S. continental shelf, retroactive to taxable years of foreign corporations beginning before January 1, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment excepts from the definition of U.S. property in existing law (1) stock or debt of a domestic corporation (other than a U.S. shareholder) which is not 25 percent owned by the U.S. shareholders, and (2) movable drilling rigs when used on the U.S. continental shelf. The Senate amendment applies to taxable years of foreign corporations beginning after December 31, 1975.

1022. Repeal of Exclusion for Earnings of Less-Developed Country Corporations for Purposes of Section 1248

House bill.—The House bill repeals the exclusion from dividend treatment provided in present law for sales or exchanges of stock in less-developed country corporations. However, the exclusion still applies to earnings accumulated before January 1, 1976, whether or not the corporation remains a less-developed country corporation. The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

1023. Exclusion From Subpart F of Certain Earnings of Insurance Companies

House bill.—The House bill adds an exception to the rules of present law subjecting to current taxation (under subpart F) the tax haven income of foreign subsidiaries of U.S. corporations. The exception applies to dividends and interest income and gains from the sale or exchange of stock or securities by an insurance company in an amount equal to one-third of the company's premium income. The provision applies to taxable years of foreign corporations beginning after December 31, 1975, and to taxable years of U.S. shareholders within which or with which such taxable years of such foreign corporations end.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

1024. Shipping Profits of Foreign Corporations

House bill.—Under present law, tax haven income subject to current taxation includes base company shipping income, except to the extent reinvested in shipping assets. Under the House bill, shipping operations within one country are excluded from base company shipping income if ships are registered within that country and the company is incorporated there. The House bill also makes it clear that debt obligations are taken into account in determining the amount invested in shipping assets. The provisions apply to taxable years of foreign corporations beginning after December 31, 1975, and to taxable years of U.S. shareholders within which or with which such taxable years of the foreign corporations end.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment follows the House bill with minor technical changes in the provision in the House bill concerning shipping operations within a single country. The Senate amendment does not contain the provision relating to the manner in which debt obligations are taken into account in determining shipping assets. The Senate amendment provides that shipping income derived from the transportation of men and supplies from a point in a foreign country to a point off-shore (such as on an oil-drilling rig) located on the continental shelf of that country or on the continental shelf adjacent to the continental shelf of that country is excluded from base company shipping income if the ship is registered in that country and the company is incorporated there.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows that part of the Senate amendment which deals with shipping operations within a single country. The provision in the House bill relating to the treatment of debt obligations is omitted because the Treasury Department has agreed that that treatment is to be provided for in the regulations. The provision in the Senate amendment relating to transporation to points offshore is not included.

1031. Requirement That Foreign Tax Credit Be Determined on Overall Basis

House bill.—Under present law, the foreign tax credit limitation may be determined on either a per-country or an overall basis (taxpayer must elect the latter). The House bill repeals the per-country limitation and requires that all taxpayers determine their foreign tax credit limitation on the overall basis. The per-country limitation is retained for possession source income. Special transitional rules are provided for taxpayers previously on the per-country limitation to permit the carryover of some excess credits from per-country years to overall years. The provision applies to taxable years ending after December 31, 1975. In the case of certain mining companies, the effective date is delayed for 3 years.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that the per-country limitation is also repealed for possession source income. The Senate amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment generally. However, it follows the House bill with respect to the effective date for certain mining companies. In addition, losses sustained by these mining companies during the period that they are permitted to use the per-country limitation are to be subject to recapture on a per-country limitation basis if foreign source income is earned in future years. Further, with respect to income from sources within a possession, the repeal of the per-country limitation is also delayed for a three-year period, subject to recapture on a per-country basis.

1032. Recapture of Foreign Losses

House bill.—In general, under present law foreign losses reduce U.S. tax on U.S. source income by decreasing the worldwide taxable income on which the U.S. tax is based. In addition, when the business operations in the loss country (or countries) become profitable, a credit against U.S. tax will be allowed for taxes paid to that country (or countries) without any recapture of the prior benefits (except in the case of foreign oil-related losses). The House bill extends the recapture provisions to apply to all overall foreign losses. The provision applies to losses sustained in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975. In the case of losses incurred in U.S. possessions, the effective date is delayed for 5 years.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, with minor technical changes, except (1) the taxpayer may elect to have more than 50 percent of its foreign source income recaptured in any taxable year, and (2) the proportionate foreign tax credit disallowance rule is deleted. The amendment applies to losse-sustained in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975. It is not applicable to (a) a loss from the disposition of a debt obligation of a foreign government issued before May 14, 1976, for property located in that country, and (b) a loss suffered subsequent to the effective date but attributable to an economic loss (worthlessness of stock or debt) which actually occurred prior to the effective date.

1033. Gross-up of Dividends From Less-Developed Country Corporations

House bill.—The House bill repeals the rule provided in present law under which dividends from less-developed country corporations are not grossed-up by the amount of foreign taxes paid on the underlying income and the deemed-paid foreign tax credits attributable to those dividends are reduced proportionately.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference

1034. Treatment of Capital Gains for Purposes of Foreign Tax Credit

House bill.—The rules under present law as to the netting of long-term and short-term gains and losses in cases where some gains or losses are U.S. source income while others are foreign source are unclear. The foreign tax credit limitations are not adjusted to reflect the lower tax rate on capital gains income received by corporations. The foreign tax credit can be inflated because the source of capital gain income is determined by the place of the sale of the asset, regardless of where used. Under the House bill, the following modifications in the foreign tax credit limitation would be made: (1) net U.S. capital losses would offset net foreign capital gains; (2) in the case of corporations, only 30/48 of the net foreign source gain would be included in the foreign tax credit limitation; and (3) the gain from the sale or exchange of personal property outside the United States would be considered U.S. source income unless one of three exceptions applies. The bill applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill with certain technical changes, except that the source rule modification would only apply to sales or exchanges made after November 12, 1975.

1035. Foreign Oil and Gas Extraction Income

House bill.—Under present law, foreign taxes which are allowable as a credit with respect to foreign oil and gas extraction income (including income from the extraction by the taxpayer of oil or gas for another person) are limited to a percentage of that income (52.8 percent in 1975, 50.4 percent in 1976, and 50 percent in 1977 and thereafter, computed on an overall basis) and may only be used to offset U.S. tax on oil-related income. The House bill provides transition period carryback rules which allow a carryback to any taxable year ending in 1975, 1976, or 1977 (on a per-country basis) of otherwise creditable taxes in excess of the percentage limitations, but not to exceed the net U.S. tax liability on the extraction income from the country for the year after taking into account the foreign tax credit. The provision is effective as of the date of enactment.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment does not contain transition period carryback rules. However, the Senate amendment contains several other changes with respect to the taxation of foreign oil and gas extraction income.

Under present law, interest from a domestic corporation is not included in the definition of foreign oil-related income. The Senate amendment revises the definition of foreign oil-related income to include interest from a domestic corporation (if the interest is treated as foreign source income because less than 20 percent of the corporation's gross income is derived from U.S. sources). This provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

Under present law, individuals are subject to the same percentage limitations on creditable taxes paid with respect to foreign oil and gas extraction income as those imposed on corporations. The Senate amendment provides that the allowable foreign tax credit on foreign oil and gas extraction income for individuals is equal to the average U.S. effective rate of tax on that income (individuals will be limited to a separate overall foreign tax credit limitation for foreign oil and gas extraction income). The provision applies to taxable years ending after December 31, 1974.

Rev. Rul. 76–215, 1976 I.R.B. No. 23, holds that the contractor under a production-sharing contract in Indonesia is not entitled to a foreign tax credit for payments made by the government-owned company to the foreign government. The IRS has announced that this ruling will apply only prospectively to claims for credits for taxes paid in taxable years beginning after June 30, 1976. The Senate amendment provides that Rev. Rul. 76–215 is not to be applicable for taxable years ending in 1977 to amounts paid to foreign governments and designated as taxes under production-sharing contracts entered into before April 8, 1976, for taxable years beginning on or after June 30, 1976. The credit is limited to 48 percent of the extraction income from the contracts. This provision applies to taxable years beginning on or after June 30, 1976.

Under present law, the amount of foreign taxes paid with respect to foreign oil and gas extraction income which under U.S. law are creditable taxes with respect to foreign oil and gas extraction income is limited to 50 percent of that income on an overall basis for taxable years ending after 1976. For purposes of this limitation "foreign oil and gas extraction income" is the income derived by the taxpayer from extraction (by the taxpayer or any other person) of minerals from oil and gas wells. Income from extraction includes the purchase and sale of crude oil by the taxpayer in cases where the taxpayer is not performing the extraction operations. Also it includes cases where the taxpayer is performing extraction services within the country for the government of that country (whether or not the taxpayer may purchase the oil from that government). Any excess may only be used to offset U.S. tax on other oil-related income.

The Senate amendment provides that the amount of foreign taxes allowable as a credit with respect to foreign oil and gas extraction income is reduced to 48 percent of that income on a per-country basis for taxable years ending after 1976. The definition of extraction income is broadened to include interest from foreign corporations and dividends from domestic corporations, provided the corporations are engaged in oil-extraction activities. In addition, the Senate amendment would treat as a royalty rather than a tax any payment made as a tax to a foreign government on income from the extraction, production, or refining of oil, gas, or other related natural resources unless the foreign government imposes a substantially similar tax on income from other activities. The provision applies to taxable years ending after December 31, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement combines the transitional carryback rule for the foreign tax credit limitation contained in the House bill with the reduction in the amount allowed as foreign tax credit on oil extraction income provided for in the Senate amendment. Under the conference agreement, the limitation on foreign taxes on extraction income allowable as a credit is reduced, for taxable years ending after 1976, to 48 percent of that income on an overall basis. The conference agreement does not include the changes in the definition of extraction income and in the treatment of foreign taxes as royalties which are contained in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement provides permanent carryover rules for excess extraction taxes rather than the transition period carryback rules in the House bill. Under the agreement, extraction taxes paid in taxable years ending after the date of enactment which exceed the limitation for the year can be carried back for two years to taxable years ending after December 31, 1974, and can be carried forward for five years. The amount carried to years after 1977 may not exceed 2 percentage points above the corporate tax rate.

The conference agreement does not include the change in the definition of oil-related income contained in the Senate amendment.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with respect to the limitation on foreign oil and gas extraction income earned by individuals and the tax credit for production-sharing contracts.

1036. Underwriting Income

House bill.—The House bill contains no provision.

Senate amendment.—The source of insurance underwriting income is not specified in the Code. The Senate amendment provides that the source of underwriting income is to be the place where the risk is located. The amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

1037. Third-Tier Foreign Tax Credit When Code Section 951 Applies

House bill.—The House bill contains no provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, if a domestic corporation is required to include in its income amounts under subpart F, a deemed-paid foreign tax credit is available with respect to foreign taxes paid by a first-tier foreign subsidiary (10 percent owned by the domestic corporation) and by a second-tier foreign subsidiary (50 percent owned by the first-tier foreign subsidiary), but, unlike the credit on actual distributions, there is no credit with respect to foreign taxes paid by a third-tier foreign subsidiary. Under the Senate amendment the foreign tax credit subpart F is made consistent with the credit for actual dividends from second- and third-tier foreign subsidiaries. Thus, a credit is allowed for foreign taxes paid by a third-tier foreign subsidiary, and a second-tier or a third-tier need only be 10 percent owned by a prior tier, provided the domestic corporation has, directly or indirectly, at least a net 5 percent ownership in each lower tier. The amendment applies with respect to earnings and profits included in income in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

1041. Interest on Bank Deposits Earned by Nonresident Aliens and Foreign Corporations

House bill.—Under present law interest paid to a nonresident alien or foreign corporation from deposits with persons carrying on the banking business is exempt from U.S. tax, but the exemption is due to expire with respect to interest paid after December 31, 1976. The House bill makes the exemption permanent without any termination date.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment extends the exemption under existing law through December 31, 1979.

1042. Changes in Ruling Requirements Under Code Section 367; Certain Changes in Section 1248

House bill.—In certain exchanges relating to the organization, reorganization, and liquidation of a foreign corporation, nonrecognition of gain is not available under present law unless a ruling that tax avoidance is not present has been obtained from the IRS before the exchange. The House bill permits nonrecognition of gain if a request for a ruling that tax avoidance is not present is filed within 183 days after the beginning of the exchange in the case of outbound transfers. In the case of all other transfers, regulations are to provide the extent that earnings are to be taken into account as a dividend in order to prevent avoidance of tax.

Under present law no court review of the ruling is available. The House bill provides for Tax Court review of these rulings.

In addition, under present law certain nonrecognition provisions allow repatriation of accumulated earnings and profits of a foreign corporation without dividend treatment. The nonrecognition provisions are modified under the House bill so that repatriated earnings and profits do not escape dividend treatment.

The House bill applies generally to sales, exchanges, and distributions taking place after October 9, 1975. However, until January 1, 1978, rulings are required on all transfers. In certain transfers not involving U.S. persons which took place between 1962 and 1976, taxpayers are given 183 days after the enactment of the Act to get a ruling.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment follows the House bill with minor technical amendments. The Senate amendment provides that if, after the beginning of an exchange for which a ruling has been obtained, there are subsequent transfers which are treated by the Secretary as part of the exchange but which are not described in the ruling, the taxpayer may file a new request for a ruling with respect to the entire exchange not later than the 183rd day after the beginning of the subsequent transfer.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a technical change dealing with the situation where there are a number of transfers which are treated by the Secretary as part of the same exchange. Pursuant to this change, if there is an organization reorganization, or liquidation involving a transfer or transfers of property by a U.S. person to a foreign corporation, nonrecognition of gain will be permitted if a request for a ruling that a tax avoidance purpose is not present is filed within 183 days after the beginning of the transfer. Under this rule, the taxpayer may request a ruling not later than the 183rd day after the beginning of any transfer which is part of the exchange, whether or not a ruling has been requested with respect to prior transfers which are part of the exchange. If the Secretary determines that the entire exchange does not involve a tax avoidance purpose, nonrecognition of gain will be permitted for that transfer and any subsequent transfers. Nonrecognition will be provided with respect to those transfers which are part of the exchange but which begin more than 183 days before the ruling request is made if the Secretary determines that tax avoidance will not result if the earlier transfers are provided nonrecognition treatment and if a ruling was obtained for the earlier transfer. If no ruling was obtained for the earlier transfer, nonrecognition will not be accorded the earlier transfer if a ruling is required for that transfer for there to be nonrecognition.

However, failure of the taxpayer to apply for a ruling with respect to an earlier transfer will not automatically result in taxable treatment of the earlier transfer because the Secretary may require nonrecognition treatment of the earlier transfer in those situations he deems appropriate even in the absence of a ruling.

1043. Contiguous Country Branches of Domestic Life Insurance Companies

House bill.—Present law subjects all U.S. companies to tax on their worldwide taxable income. Under the House bill a U.S. mutual life insurance company may elect to account for contiguous country business separately from other business to avoid U.S. taxation on contiguous country income to the extent such income is not repatriated. A company making this election must recognize as gain the net unrealized appreciation on the branch's assets. A domestic stock company selling policies similar to those sold by a mutual company may transfer assets to a contiguous country subsidiary and recognize the net gain on the assets transferred.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment extends the House bill to stock companies selling, through contiguous country subsidiaries, policies which are similar to those sold by mutual companies.

1044. Transitional Rule for Bond, etc. Losses of Foreign Banks

House bill.—Under present law, gains and losses on the sale or exchange of government and corporate bonds and certain other types of indebtedness are treated as ordinary income and loss in the case of financial institutions and foreign corporations which would be considered banks if they were domestic corporations. However, for taxable years beginning before July 12, 1969, these amounts were treated as capital gain or loss. The House bill provides that, for foreign corporations which otherwise would be considered financial institutions, net gains from these transactions will be considered capital gain to the extent of any capital loss carryovers attributable to the same types of sales or exchanges in taxable years beginning before July 12, 1969.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

1051. Tax Treatment of Corporations Conducting Trade or Business in Puerto Rico and Possessions of the United States

Under present law corporations operating a trade or business in a possession are entitled to exclude from gross income all income from sources without the United States including foreign source income earned outside the possession if they satisfy an 80-percent source and a 50-percent active trade or business test. However, dividends from a possessions corporation are not eligible for the intercorporate dividends received deduction.

Under the House bill a corporation meeting the 80-percent and 50-percent tests is entitled to a special foreign tax credit equal to the U.S. tax on that income plus income from certain investments in that possession. In addition, dividends from a possessions corporation are eligible for the intercorporate dividends received deduction. The bill applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, with minor technical changes, except that the Senate amendment disallows any foreign tax credits on the Puerto Rican withholding tax on liquidation. However, the Senate amendment continues to exempt foreign source income derived from sources outside the possession which is earned before October 1, 1976 whether or not the invested funds are derived from the possessions business.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that the agreement allows a foreign tax credit on taxes paid with respect to liquidations occuring before January 1, 1979, to the extent the taxes are attributable to amounts earned before January 1, 1976.

1052. Western Hemisphere Trade Corporations

House bill.—The House bill phases out the 14-percent tax rate reduction provided under present law for Western Hemisphere trade corporations over a 4-year period beginning in 1976.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

1053. Repeal of Provisions Relating to China Trade Act Corporations

House bill. The special tax benefits granted to China Trade Act corporations and their shareholders, which generally permit the corporation and its shareholders to pay no U.S. tax, are phased out over four years beginning in 1976.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment provides a two-year phaseout of the special tax treatment for China Trade Act corporations and their shareholders.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement phases out the special tax treatment for China Trade Act corporations and their shareholders over a 3-year period beginning in 1976.

1061–1064, 1066, and 1067. Denial of Certain Tax Benefits on Income Derived in Connection With Participation in an International Boycott

House bill.—The House bill contains no provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment denies to any taxpayer that agrees to participate in or cooperate with an international boycott based on race, nationality or religion the benefits of the foreign tax credit, deferral of earnings of foreign subsidiaries, DISC, and the exclusion from gross income of foreign earned income on income from countries requiring boycott participation. The Secretary is to require the filing of reports (subject to criminal penalties) to determine whether a taxpayer has participated in a boycott. The provision is effective with respect to conduct 30 days or more after date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment by denying the foreign tax credit and the benefits of DISC and deferral. However, the exclusion for income earned abroad is not denied to employees of a taxpayer who participates in or cooperates with an international boycott.

The benefits of deferral and DISC are denied to the taxpayer by requiring a deemed distribution of earnings to the shareholders of the DISC or controlled foreign corporation. The benefits of the foreign tax credit are denied to the taxpayer by reducing the otherwise allowable foreign tax credit to which the taxpayer would be entitled under section 901 of the Code after applying the limitation, if applicable, of section 907 and of section 904. Taxes which are denied the foreign tax credit under this provision are not entitled to be carried backwards or forwards as foreign tax credits but may be eligible to be deducted in computing taxable income. Of course, if so deducted, the rules of sections 861 and 862 would be applied with respect to the deduction.

A taxpayer participates in or cooperates with an international boycott if the taxpayer agrees, as a condition of doing business directly or indirectly within a country or with the government, a company, or a national of a country (1) to refrain from doing business within a country which is the object of an international boycott or with the government, companies or nationals of that country; (2) to refrain from doing business with any U.S. person engaged in trade within another country which is the object of an international boycott or with the government, companies, or nationals of that country; (3) to refrain from doing business with any company whose ownership or management is made up, all or in part, of individuals of a particular nationality, race, or religion, or to remove (or refrain from selecting) corporate directors who are individuals of a particular nationality, race, or religion; (4) to refrain from employing individuals of a particular nationality, race, or religion: or (5) to refrain from shipping or insuring products on a carrier owned, leased, or operated by a person who does not participate in or cooperate with an international boycott. While it is anticipated that in most cases a third country will be the object of an international boycott, it is possible that the United States may be the object of an international boycott. The agreement may be with respect to any type of business (including manufacturing, banking, and service businesses).

The conference agreement permits a taxpayer to agree to comply with certain laws without being treated as agreeing to participate in or cooperate with an international boycott. A taxpayer may agree to meet requirements imposed by a foreign country with respect to an international boycott if a U.S. law, executive order, or regulation sanctions that participation or cooperation. Secondly, the taxpayer may agree to comply with a prohibition on the importation of goods produced in whole or in part in any boycotted country or to comply with a prohibition imposed by a country on the exportation of products obtained in that country to any boycotted country. The taxpayer, however, may not agree to refrain from importing or exporting to or from a particular country products which are, or which contain components which are, made by a company on a boycott list.

A taxpayer is not considered as having participated in or cooperated with an international boycott unless he has agreed to such participation or cooperation. The agreement need not be in writing; there may be an implied agreement. However, an agreement will not be inferred from the mere fact that any country is exercising its sovereign rights. Thus, a taxpayer is not considered to have agreed to participate in or cooperate with an international boycott merely by reason of the inability of the taxpayer to obtain an export or import license from a sovereign country for specific goods. Similarly, a taxpayer's inability, under the laws or administrative practices of a country, to bring certain personnel into that country, to bring certain ships into the waters of that country, to provide certain services in that country, or to import or export certain products to or from a country, is not to be considered to constitute an agreement to participate in or cooperate with an international boycott. Further, the signing (at the time of import), of a certification as to content, which is required to obtain an import license, does not by itself constitute an agreement by the taxpayer. However, this would not permit the making of an agreement not to import certain goods into the country. In addition, a course of conduct of complying with sovereign law may, along with other factors, be evidence of the existence of an agreement.

If the taxpayer has participated in or cooperated with an international boycott in a country, he is presumed to have participated in or cooperated with that boycott with respect to all operations in all countries which require of the taxpayer (or of other persons, whether or not related to the taxpayer) participation in or cooperation with that international boycott. However, the taxpayer may establish that he has conducted clearly separate and identifiable operations in that country or another country through the same corporation or related corporations with respect to which there is no cooperation with or participation in that boycott.

Where there are not continuous business activities within a country, separate and identifiable operations may include separate export or import transactions. Where there are continuous business activities within a country, each separate business activity (taking into account basic differences in the types of any products sold or services offered, clear separation of the management of the activities, and so forth) may represent a separate and identifiable operation. If the taxpayer is able to establish separate and identifiable operations, he may then establish that with respect to certain operations there was no participation in or cooperation with that international boycott. The burden of proof will be upon the taxpayer to establish that an operation is separate and identifiable and that there was no participation in or cooperation with an international boycott in connection with that operation.

In addition, the conference agreement provides a proration formula for computing the amount of tax benefits which are related to an international boycott, and thus are denied to the taxpayer. This formula, it is anticipated, will be used by taxpayers who are unable to separate their tax benefits between boycott and nonboycott operations. Under this formula, the reduction of the tax benefits allowed to the taxpayer are determined by multiplying the otherwise allowable tax benefits by a fraction. The numerator of the fraction reflects the worldwide operations of the taxpayer in countries associated in carrying out the international boycott (exclusive of those operations for which the presumption of participation or cooperation has been rebutted). The denominator reflects the worldwide foreign operations of the taxpayer. The factors to be taken into account in computing the fraction are to be determined in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary. It is anticipated that the regulations will reflect the nature of the boycott activity carried on by the taxpayer and will take into account such factors as purchases, sales, payroll or other items which my be relevant. Unless the taxpayer establishes to the contrary, all operations of the taxpayer in connection with countries which require participation in or cooperation with the boycott are to be reflected in the numerator of the fraction.

The proration formula is not to apply if instead the taxpayer, with respect to his operations which are related to participation in or cooperation with an international boycott, clearly demonstrates the amount of the foreign taxes and earnings which are allocable to the boycott operations. Those taxpayers who are not able to clearly account separately for the tax credits and earnings which are allocable to their boycott operations must apply the proration formula in computing the amount of tax benefits which are denied to them. Of course, all operations of the taxpayer in countries which require participation in or cooperation with that boycott are persumed to be boycott operations unless the taxpayer establishes to the contrary.

It is expected that the provisions of the conference agreement will be administered in the normal course of a tax audit. However, the taxpayer will be required to make a report if he has conducted operations in a country (or with the government, a company, or a national of a country) which is on a list (maintained by the Secretary of the Treasury) of countries requiring participation in or cooperation with an international boycott, or in any other country which the taxpayer has reason to believe requires such participation or cooperation. The taxpayer is to include in the report the identity of any country in connection with which the taxpayer has participated in or cooperated with (or has been requested to participate in) an international boycott as a condition of doing business in that country (or with such government, company or national). The report should also indicate the nature of any operations in connection with such countries.

A taxpayer will also be expected to disclose in the report any country where the taxpayer has been requested to participate in such a manner which could be interpreted as an official request of that country. This is not to say that the request must be made directly by a government official or representative.

The Secretary of the Treasury is to publish the list, which is to be updated periodically, of those countries which may require participation in or cooperation with an international boycott. The initial list must be published within 30 days after date of enactment. However, the absence of a country from the list does not mean that such country is not a country which requires participation in or cooperation with an international boycott.

The willful failure to make a report will subject the taxpayer to a fine of not more than $25,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. A failure to make a report will not be a willful failure if the taxpayer had no knowledge of a boycott operation unless the taxpayer's failure to have knowledge is so negligent as to constitute a reckless disregard of the requirements of the law.

The initial determination of participation in or cooperation with any international boycott is to be made by the taxpayer, who will be expected on his return to reduce the amount of the foreign tax credit, deferral benefits, or DISC benefits to the extent that the taxpayer has participated in or cooperated with an international boycott. The taxpayer is to show how any reduction is made. However, it is expected that the returns and the determinations by the taxpayer will be audited and the accuracy of the taxpayer's determinations will be verified in the usual course of such an audit. While this verification will be done in the usual course of a tax audit, it is anticipated that the IRS will develop a group of experts who are knowledgeable in audit aspects of determining whether a taxpayer is involved in an international boycott.

The conferees have also established a determination procedure so that Taxpayers conducted business with foreign countries will be able to obtain a determination from the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether their operations constitute an international boycott agreement. While the determination procedure may rely upon the audit expertise of the IRS, is anticipated that this procedure will be delegated to Treasury officials. The determination request may be filed by the taxpayer before he has computed and filed his tax return, or at any time during the course of an audit of a tax return in which the question is raised as to whether the taxpayer has agreed to participate in or cooperate with an international boycott. To obtain a determination from the Secretary, the taxpayer will be required to make available all factual materials which may be relevant to the Secretary's determination. If the request for a determination is made before the particular operation is commenced or before the close of the taxable year, the Secretary may defer making the determination until the close of the taxable year.

If the Secretary does determine that the taxpayer has agreed to participate in or cooperate within an international boycott, there will be a presumption that the participation or cooperation of the taxpayer relates to all of the operations of the taxpayer in all of the boycott countries involved. However, the taxpayer will be entitled to rebut this presumption by demonstrating that certain operations are clearly separate and identifiable and are not connected with an international boycott agreement. An adverse determination by the Secretary will be reflected by the taxpayer either directly in his return or by normal deficiency procedures of the Internal Revenue Service. Thus, a determination of participation in or cooperation with an international boycott agreement by the Secretary will be reviewable by the courts in the same manner as the usual tax controversy.

In order to assess the effectiveness of this legislation in discouraging participation in or cooperation with international boycotts, the conference agreement requires the Secretary to report annually to the taxwriting committees the number of boycott reports filed with the IRS and the percentage which indicated that the taxpayer had participated in an international boycott. Further, the report to the committees should contain a detailed description of the results of the audits of these taxpayers in connection with boycott operations, the changes made by the IRS on unreported boycott activities, and such other information which would be useful or helpful in evaluating the administration of these provisions. The report should also indicate to the extent possible the tax benefits which are claimed for operations in each boycott country; the benefits claimed by taxpayers in those countries and the benefits denied by application of these provisions; and the extent that benefits denied were attributable to boycott agreements determined by reason of an Internal Revenue audit. The report must be in such a form that it cannot, directly or indirectly, be associated with or otherwise identify a particular taxpayer.

The international boycott provisions are to apply to any participation in or cooperation with an international boycott made more than 30 days after the date of enactment. However, in the case of operations which are carried out in accordance with the terms of a binding contract entered into before September 2, 1976, the international boycott provisions shall first apply to participation or cooperation after December 31, 1977.

1065. Denial of Certain Tax Benefits Attributable to Bribe-Produced Income

House bill.—The House bill contains no provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment provides that if a taxpayer pays a bribe to a foreign government official, the tax benefits of the foreign tax credit, DISC, and the deferral of earnings of foreign subsidiaries are denied to that taxpayer. The Secretary is authorized to require (subject to criminal penalties) the filing of reports and to determine whether a taxpayer has bribe-produced income. The provision is effective for illegal payments made 30 or more days after date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement subjects to current taxation as a deemed dividend an amount equal to the amount of any bribe paid by a foreign subsidiary or a DISC of a U.S. company. In addition, the earnings and profits of any corporation paying a foreign bribe is not to be reduced by the amount paid. The provision applies to illegal payments made 30 or more days after enactment.

SECTION OMITTED FROM SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 23

Agricultural Products of Foreign Corporations

House bill.—Under present law, sales of agricultural products not grown in the U.S. in commercially marketable quantities are not included within the definition of base company sales income.

The House bill provides that sales of foreign-grown agricultural products which differ in grade or type from, and are not readily substitutable for (taking into account consumer preferences), agricultural products grown in the United States in commercially marketable quantities are not included within the definition of base company sales income. The provision applies to taxable years of foreign corporations beginning after December 31, 1975, and to taxable years of U.S. shareholders within which or with which the taxable years of the foreign corporations end.

1101. Amendments Affecting DISC

House bill.—The DISC provisions presently in effect permit shareholders to defer taxation of up to 50 percent of the export profits allocated to the DISC. Under the House bill, incremental rules are adopted for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975, which permit DISC benefits to the extent that current export gross receipts exceed 75 percent of the average for a 3-year moving base period (initially 1972–1974) which moves forward after 1980. A small DISC exemption to the incremental rule is provided for DISCs having taxable income of $100,000 or less for a taxable year. This exemption phases out at $150,000. DISC benefits are terminated for sales of agricultural products made after October 2, 1975, except those subject to marketing quotas. DISC benefits are also terminated for military sales made after October 2, 1975, except if the products are to be used solely for nonmilitary purposes. Fixed contract sales of military and agricultural products continue to receive DISC benefits for sales made before October 3, 1978. Fixed contract sales of natural resource products denied DISC benefits under the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 are made eligible for DISC benefits for an additional 5-year period from March 17, 1975 until March 18, 1980.

Under present law, DISC benefits are denied for sales of depletable natural resources including timber. Under the House bill, timber is treated as an agricultural product. Upon the disqualification of a DISC, the accumulated DISC income is recaptured under present law over a period equal to the period that the DISC was in existence not to exceed 10 years. The House bill provides that upon the disqualification of a DISC, the accumulated DISC income is recaptured over a period equal to twice the period that the DISC was in existence not to exceed 10 years. Where DISC benefits with respect to a product terminate, loans to the related supplier no longer qualify as a producer's loan under present law. The House bill provides that where DISC benefits with respect to a product terminate, loans to a related supplier may still qualify as a producer's loan.

Senate amendment.—The incremental rule adopted under the Senate amendment limits DISC benefits to the extent the current export gross receipts exceed 60 percent of the average for 3 out of 4 base period years (initially 1973–1976) which moves forward after 1979. DISC benefits are retained for agriculture products, but the incremental rules will apply only after 1979 using a 3 out of 5-year base period. DISC benefits are terminated for military sales unless it is determined that the property is competitive with foreign-manufactured property.

Under present law, taxpayers can prevent recapture of DISC benefits by selling or distributing DISC stock in certain nontaxable transactions. Under the Senate amendment, the sale or distribution of DISC stock in certain nontaxable transactions will result in recapture of accumulated DISC income.

Under present law, the combination of the general deemed distribution rule and the rule prescribing the source of any distribution to meet the 95 percent export receipts requirement can result in a partial double counting of the DISC's taxable income with respect to terminating deferral of taxation to its shareholders. The Senate amendment eliminates the problem of double counting by altering the source rules for distributions to meet qualification requirements.

The Senate amendment is otherwise the same as the House bill, except for technical changes. The Senate amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

Conference agreement.—Under the conference agreement, the incremental rule applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975, and is 67 percent of the average gross receipts for a 4-year base period (initially 1972–1975) which moves forward after 1979. Sales of agricultural products are treated the same as sales of other products. DISC benefits are terminated for 50 percent of military sales (whether or not competitive) made after October 2, 1975.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

1201. Public Inspection of Written Determinations by Internal Revenue Service

House bill.—Under present law, private letter rulings and other determinations of the IRS have been made public by the courts under the Freedom of Information Act. Certain confidential and other information is exempted from disclosure by the FOIA, but the taxpayer's identity is disclosed. The full impact of the FOIA in this area is still being litigated.

Under the House bill. IRS determinations issued pursuant to a request made after September 24, 1975, are made public, after deletion of certain information. Deleted material includes commercial or financial information, the disclosure of which could cause material financial harm; trade secrets; classified matter; information exempted by statute; bank regulation information and matters of personal privacy. The taxpayer's identity is to be deleted only from audit-type determinations and required rulings. Prior determinations, issued after July 4, 1967 (the effective date of the Freedom of Information Act), and requested before September 25, 1975, are made public, but with identifying details deleted. Prior determinations are made public contingent upon funds being appropriated to the IRS for the purpose, but not until 6-months' public notice is given that they will be made public. (Written determinations issued before July 5, 1967, are not made public.) The House bill also establishes procedures for resolution of disputes regarding deletion of information before release of a determination, including court actions to restrain disclosure and to obtain additional disclosure, and provides that a determination shall not be used as a precedent by any person in any case.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is similar to the House bill regarding requests made with respect to determinations issued after November 1, 1976, except that names and identifying details are not normally to be disclosed. Background file documents related to a determination are to be made available upon request. Deleted material also includes geological and geophysical information and data, including maps, concerning wells, and commercial or financial information which is privileged or confidential. Determinations requested before November 1, 1976, are made public, except for certain required rulings. Disclosure is contingent upon funds being appropriated to the IRS for the purpose. Rules are established for the order in which prior determinations will be released, with the more recent determinations given priority. If the IRS receives a communication concerning a pending request for a determination from anyone outside the IRS (other than the taxpayer), the contact is to be noted, or "flagged", on the determination when it is made public. Any person may file suit and learn the identity of the taxpayer, if the Tax Court finds evidence that an impropriety occurred or undue influence was exercised with respect to the determination. The court could also order disclosure of material previously deleted.

The amendment provides that the Secretary may determine any precedential effect by regulations and creates a civil remedy for intentional or willful failure of the IRS to make required deletions or to follow the procedures of this section, including minimum damages of $1,000 plus costs. It allows IRS collection of fees for search and duplication costs in making information available on request and establishes rules for IRS records disposal.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The confrees also make it clear that communications concerning a pending determination from another agency which provides assistance to the IRS upon its request are not to be flagged. Moreover, the conferees do not intend that internal memoranda within the Internal Revenue Service relating to a particular written determination, or the question involved therein, which relate to development of the Service's legal position on the question involved, should be a part of the background file (and for this purpose Chief Counsel should be considered part of the Internal Revenue Service). However, correspondence which seeks to elicit further factual information, and the response thereto, would not be excluded from the background file by the previous sentence (for example, in a case where the National Office seeks further information regarding a district director's request for technical advice). Because of their similarity to internal memoranda and attorneys work product, correspondence between the Internal Revenue Service and the Department of Justice regarding a particular civil or criminal investigation or case, which is related to a particular written determination, or with respect to the relationship of a determination to any civil or criminal investigation or case, shall not be considered part of the background file. (The question of the availability of these documents is to be governed by other provisions of law, including the Freedom of Information Act.)

1202. Disclosure of Returns and Return Information

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—(a) General.—Under present law, tax returns are "public records", but they are generally open to inspection only under regulations or under executive orders. Additionally, the statute provides a number of specific situations in which tax returns can be disclosed.

The Senate amendment provides that returns and return information are to be confidential and not subject to disclosure except as specifically provided by statute.

In general, "returns" are defined in the regulations presently in effect as including information returns, schedules, lists, and other written statements filed with the IRS which are supplemental to or become a part of the return and other records, reports, information received orally or in writing, factual data, documents, papers, abstracts, memoranda, or evidence taken, or any portion thereof relating to returns and schedules, etc. The Senate amendment defines the term "return" to mean any tax or information return, declaration of estimated tax or claim for refund which is required or permitted to be filed with respect to any person. It also includes any amendment, supplemental schedule or attachment, filed with the tax return, information return, etc. "Return information" is defined as any data received by or prepared by the Secretary with respect to a return or with respect to the determination of the existence of the liability of any person for any tax, penalty, interest, fine, forfeiture, or other imposition. Information as to whether a taxpayer's return was, is being, or will be examined is also to be considered return information. Under the amendment, data in a form that cannot be associated with or otherwise identify a particular taxpayer will not constitute return information.

(b) Disclosure to Congress.—Congressional committees are classified in three categories for disclosure purposes under present law. The tax committees may inspect tax information in executive session. Select committees of the House and Senate may inspect tax information in executive session if specifically authorized to do so by a resolution of the appropriate body. Standing and select committees may inspect tax information under an executive order issued by the President for the committee in question and on the adoption of a resolution (by the full committee) authorizing inspection.

The Senate amendment provides that the tax-writing committees, upon written request of their respective chairmen, may have access to returns and return information in executive session. The Chief of Staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation may have access to returns and return information. Nontax committees are to be furnished returns and return information in executive session upon (1) a committee action approving the decision to request such returns, (2) an authorizing resolution of the House or Senate, as the case may be, and (3) a written request by the Chairman of the committee. The resolution of the appropriate body authorizing these committees to obtain returns or return information must specify the purpose for the inspection and that the inspection is to be made only if there is no alternative source of information reasonably available to the committee. The committees, through the committee Chairman and ranking minority member, can designate no more than 4 agents (2 majority and 2 minority) to inspect the returns or return information requested.

Under present law, the tax committees and select committees authorized to inspect tax information may submit "any relevant or useful" information obtained to the House or Senate. The Senate amendment provides that the tax-writing committees may submit tax information to the Senate or House, as the case may be. The nontax-writing committees may submit such information to the Senate or House sitting in executive session. The Joint Committee on Taxation, or its Chief of Staff, may submit tax information to the Committee on Ways and Means or to the Committee on Finance sitting in executive session.

(c) Disclosure to the President (and other Federal agencies).—An existing executive order permits so-called "tax checks" and inspection of tax returns by the President and certain designated White House employees. Requests for tax checks and inspection are to be in writing and signed by the President personally.

The Senate amendment provides that disclosure of returns and return information can be made to the President and/or to certain named employees of the White House Office, upon the written request of the President, signed by him personally. A request is to specify, among other things, the reason disclosure is requested. The President (or a duly authorized representative of the Executive Office) and the head of a Federal agency also may make a written requested for a "tax check" with respect to prospective appointees. The "tax check" is limited to whether the individual has filed income tax returns for the last 3 years, within the last 3 years has failed to pay any tax within 10 days after notice and demand, has been assessed a negligence penalty within the last 3 years, has been or is under any criminal tax investigation (and the results of such investigation), or has been assessed a civil penalty for fraud. The President and the head of any agency requesting returns and return information under this section will be required to file annually a confidential report with the Joint Committee on Taxation identifying the taxpayers, the returns or return information involved, and the reason for requesting such returns or return information. However, the President will not be required to report on requests pertaining to current employees of the executive branch. The reports will be maintained by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation for a period not exceeding 2 years unless, within that period of time, the Joint Committee on Taxation determines that a disclosure to the Congress is necessary.

(d) Tax criminal cases.—Under present law, tax returns and other tax information of any taxpayer may be furnished upon request without written application to U.S. Attorneys and Justice Department attorneys in civil or criminal tax cases referred by the IRS to the Justice Department for prosecution or defense. Where the Justice Department is investigating a possible violation of the civil or criminal tax laws and the matter has not been referred to the Justice Department by the IRS, a Justice Department attorney or U.S. attorney may obtain tax information upon written application where it is "necessary in the performance of his official duties". The Justice Department can obtain the returns of potential witnesses and third parties. Also, the IRS will answer an inquiry from the Justice Department as to whether a prospective juror has been investigated by the IRS.

Under the Senate amendment, the Justice Department will continue to receive returns and return information with respect to the taxpayer whose civil or criminal tax liability is at issue. Written request is required in cases other than refund cases and cases referred by the IRS. The return or return information of a third party will be disclosed to the Justice Department in the event that the treatment of an item reflected on his return is or may be relevant to the resolution of an issue of the taxpayer's liability under the Code. The return or return information of a third party will also be disclosed to the Justice Department when the third party's return or return information relates or may relate to a transaction between the third party and the taxpayer whose tax liability is or may be at issue and the return information pertaining to that transaction may affect the resolution of an issue of the taxpayer's liability. Disclosure of a third party return or return information will be made only pursuant to written request, except for refund cases and cases referred to Justice by the IRS. A third party return may also be disclosed in a court proceeding, subject to the same item and transactional tests described above, except that the items and transactions must have a direct relationship to the resolution of an issue of the taxpayer's liability. In tax cases, the Justice Department and the taxpayer whose liability is at issue will be allowed to inquire of the IRS as to whether a prospective juror has been under an audit or investigation by the IRS. However, responses to such inquiries are to be limited to the existence or nonexistence of an IRS investigation.

(e) Nontax criminal cases.—Under present law, a U.S. Attorney or an attorney of the Department of Justice may obtain tax information in any case "where necessary in the performance of his official duties". This may be obtained on written application, giving the name of the taxpayer, the kind of tax involved, the taxable period involved, and the reason inspection is desired. The application is to be signed by the U.S. Attorney involved or by the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General. Tax information obtained by the Justice Department may be used in proceedings conducted by or before any department or establishment of the Federal Government or in which the United States is a party. The IRS also will answer an inquiry from the Justice Department as to whether a prospective juror has been investigated by the IRS.

Under the Senate amendment, tax information can be disclosed to the Justice Department and other Federal agencies for nontax criminal purposes only by order of a U.S. District Court. The order would be issued upon a showing (1) that there is probable cause to believe, based upon information believed to be reliable, that a specified criminal act has been committed, (2) that there is reason to believe that the information contained in the return is directly probative of the commission of the crime, and (3) that the information sought cannot reasonably be obtained from any other source. Only those parts of the return determined by the Court to be necessary to the investigation or prosecution would be subject to disclosure. The amendment authorizes the IRS, either upon its own initiative or pursuant to written request, to disclose in writing to the Justice Department or any other Federal agency, information relating to the possible violation of a Federal criminal law which is received from sources other than the taxpayer and his representatives.

(f) Nontax civil matters.—Under present law, U.S. Attorneys and officials of other Federal Agencies may obtain tax information in nontax civil cases in the same manner and to the same extent as in nontax criminal cases. The Senate amendment provides that disclosure of returns and return information cannot be made to the Justice Department or other Federal enforcement agencies in civil cases except in those instances where it is defending the United States in a suit involving a renegotiation of contracts previously determined by the Renegotiation Board. Disclosure would be allowed under the amendment to Treasury personnel (other than employees of the IRS) of returns or return information for purposes of tax administration.

The GAO does not presently have independent authority to inspect tax returns. It does have access to tax returns when it audits IRS operations as agent of the Joint Committee on Taxation. H.R. 8948 (reported by the Government Operations Committee and passed by the House) would specifically authorize the GAO to conduct audits of the IRS and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. H.R. 8948 would permit GAO to have access to tax returns and tax records to the extent necessary to conduct the audits.

The Senate amendment provides that the GAO can initiate audits of the IRS on its own or at the request of any committee of Congress. The amendment authorizes the GAO to inspect returns and return information to the extent necessary in conducting the audits. It is intended that the GAO examine returns and individual tax transactions only for the purpose of, and in the number necessary to serve as a reasonable basis for, evaluating the effectiveness, efficiency and economy of IRS operations and activities. It is not intended that the GAO would superimpose its judgment upon that of the IRS in individual tax cases. GAO would notify the Joint Committee on Taxation in writing of the subject matter of the planned audit and any plans for inspection of income tax returns. GAO could proceed with its planned audit unless the Joint Committee, by a two-thirds vote of its members, vetoes the GAO audit plan within 30 days of first receiving notice of the proposed audit from GAO.

(g) Statistical use.—The Census Bureau, the Bureau of Economic Analysis, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Securities & Exchange Commission are presently authorized to use tax returns and return information for statistical purposes.

Under the Senate amendment, Census, the BEA, and FTC, and non-IRS Treasury personnel could obtain tax returns and limited return information for statistical and research purposes. The BEA and the FTC would only receive corporate tax information. Publication of statistical studies identifying any particular taxpayer is prohibited.

(h) Inspection by Federal agencies.—Under present law, several agencies may generally inspect tax information for qualified purposes without a specific written request. Inspection of tax information on a general basis is made most often by HEW, the Renegotiation Board and the FTC.

Under the Senate amendment, limited disclosures on a general basis would be permitted to the Social Security Administration, the Railroad Retirement Board, the Department of Labor, the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, and the Renegotiation Board in certain limited situations where the return information is directly related to programs administered by the agency in question.

(i) State and local governments.—On the written request of the State Governor, tax returns may presently be inspected by State tax officials for purposes of administering the State's tax laws. Tax information may also be obtained by the States for local governments to be used in administering the local tax laws.

The Senate amendment provides that Federal tax returns and return information may be disclosed to State tax officials solely for use in administering the State's tax laws. The tax information would not be available to the State Governor or any other nontax personnel, or to local governments. No disclosure may be made to any State requiring taxpayers to attach to, or include in, State tax returns a copy of any portion of the Federal return (or any information reflected on the Federal return) unless the State adopts provisions of law by December 31, 1978 protecting the confidentiality of the Federal returns or return information.

In order to protect the confidentiality of returns which the States receive from the IRS under the present exchange programs, the returns are, in most States, processed on computers used solely by the State tax authorities. In certain States, however, the requirements of the tax authorities are not sufficient to justify a separate computer, and, accordingly, the tax authorities have the Federal tax returns processed on central computers shared by several State agencies which are operated by State employees who are not in the tax department. In such situations, the IRS requires that tax department personnel be present at all times when the Federal tax returns are being processed. The Senate amendment would permit those States currently time-sharing with other State agencies to continue to do so to the extent authorized and under the conditions specified in Treasury regulations.

(j) Taxpayers with a material interest.—Income tax returns presently are open to certain persons with a material interest in those returns. For example, returns are open to the filing taxpayers, trust beneficiaries, partners, heirs of the decedent, etc.

Under the Senate amendment, persons with a material interest would continue to have the right to inspect returns and, where appropriate, return information to the same extent as provided under current regulations. Return information (in contrast to "returns") could be disclosed to persons with a material interest only to the extent the IRS determines this would not adversely affect the administration of the tax laws.

(k) Miscellaneous disclosures.—Also, under present law, address information is provided to the Federal Parent Locator Service regarding "absent parents" under Public Law 93–647 (section 453 of the Social Security Act). Under the Senate amendment, returns and return information of taxpayers and spouses could be disclosed to appropriate Federal, State and local agencies for purposes of, and only to the extent necessary in, locating deserting parents and determining ability to make support payments.

Several provisions of the regulations allow the disclosure of tax information for miscellaneous administrative and other purposes. In other cases, the statute specifically requires public disclosure and certain types of returns (e.g., applications for exempt status by organizations). Under the Senate amendment, returns would continue to be open to public inspection in those situations where public disclosure is provided for in present law. Limited disclosure of returns and return information would be permitted in some, but not all, of the miscellaneous situations where disclosure is permitted under present law.

(l) Procedures and records concerning disclosure.—Several different offices of the IRS presently have the responsibility for approving the disclosure of tax information to particular agencies. The IRS presently maintains records concerning disclosure, but the type of records maintained are not standardized as between, e.g., Service Centers, and a complete inventory of records is not maintained.

The Senate amendment provides that in those cases in which disclosure or inspection of returns or return information would be permitted, it would be permitted only at the times, in the manner, and at the places prescribed by regulations. The IRS, and each Federal and State agency receiving tax information, would be required to maintain a standardized system of permanent records on the use and disclosure of returns and return information.

(m) Safeguards.—Except for the general criminal penalty for unauthorized disclosure, the tax law does not presently provide rules for safeguarding tax information disclosed by the IRS to other agencies. The IRS has no authority to audit the safeguards established by other agencies or to stop disclosure to other agencies that do not properly maintain safeguards.

Under the Senate amendment, no tax information would be furnished by the IRS to another agency (including commissions, States, etc.) unless the other agency complies with a comprehensive system of administrative, technical, and physical safeguards designed to protect the confidentiality of the returns and return information. In the event of unauthorized disclosure by the other agency or its failure to maintain adequate safeguards, the IRS could (subject to an administrative appeal procedure) terminate disclosure to that agency.

(n) Reports to Congress.—Since 1971, the Joint Committee has received from the IRS a semi-annual report on disclosure of tax information.

The Senate amendment requires the IRS to make a confidential report to the Joint Committee each year on all requests (and the reasons therefor) received for disclosure of tax returns or return information. The report would include, as a separate section to be publicly disclosed, a listing of all agencies receiving tax return information, the number of cases in which disclosure was made to them during the year, and the general purposes for which the requests were made. In addition, the IRS would be required to file a quarterly report with the tax committees regarding procedures and safeguards followed by recipients of returns and return information.

(o) Enforcement.—Under present law, unauthorized disclosure of a Federal income tax return or financial information appearing thereon by a Federal or State employee is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of up to $1,000 or imprisonment of up to one year, or both. It is also a misdemeanor punishable in the same manner for any person to print or publish an income tax return or financial information appearing therein.

Under the Senate amendment, the criminal violation of the disclosure rules would become a felony punishable by a fine of up to $5,000 and imprisonment of up to 5 years, or both. It would also be a felony, subject to the same penalties, for any person willfully to receive returns or return information as a result of an offer by that person to exchange an item of material value for the unauthorized disclosure. A civil remedy is provided for any taxpayer damaged by any unlawful disclosure of returns or return information.

Under the conference agreement, a prospective employee will receive notice from the IRS at the time it receives a request for a tax check with respect to the prospective employee. The confidential report to the Joint Committee by the President and heads of agencies will be made quarterly rather than annually as provided in the Senate amendment.

In addition, the court order required for disclosure of tax information to the Justice Department and other Federal agencies in nontax criminal cases will be issued upon a showing that: (i) there is reasonable cause to believe, based upon information believed to be reliable, that a specific criminal act has been committed; (ii) there is reason to believe that the return or return information is probative evidence of a matter in issue related to the commission of the criminal act; and (iii) the information sought to be disclosed cannot reasonably be obtained from any other source unless it is determined that, notwithstanding the reasonable availability of the information from another source, the return or return information sought constitutes the most probative evidence of a matter in issue relating to the commission of the criminal act.

The first requirement set forth above ("reasonable cause . . .") is intended to be less strict than the "probable cause" standard (contained in the Senate amendment) for issuing a search warrant, and this "reasonable cause" requirement is to be construed according to the plain meaning of the words involved. The term "criminal act" includes any act with respect to which the criminal penalty provisions of a Federal nontax statute (which may also include civil penalty provisions) would apply. This court procedure contemplates an in camera inspection of the return or return information by the judge to determine whether any part or parts thereof meet the requirements outlined above. Only the part or parts of the return or return information determined by the court to meet these requirements would be subject to disclosure under this provision. In this regard, the conference agreement contemplates that the more personal the information involved (e.g., medical and psychiatric information), the more restrictive the court would be in allowing disclosure.

The return or return information could be introduced in an administrative or judicial hearing if the court finds that it is probative of a matter in issue relevant in establishing the commission of a crime or the guilt of a party. The credibility of a witness does not constitute a matter in issue for purposes of these rules. Thus, under the conference agreement a return or return information would not be admissible for purposes of "collateral impeachment" (i.e., discrediting a witness on matters not bearing upon the question of the commission of a crime or the guilt of a party).

The conference agreement modifies the provision in the Senate amendment requiring those States which require taxpayers to attach to, or include in, their State tax return a copy of any portion of their Federal return (or any information reflected on the Federal return) to adopt provisions of law by December 31, 1978, protecting the confidentiality of the attached copy of the Federal return or of the included return information. Although the copy of the Federal return or the return information required by a State or local government to be attached to, or included in, the State or local return does not constitute Federal "return or return information", subject to the Federal confidentiality rules, the policy underlying this requirement is that the attached copy of the return and the included information should be treated by State and local governments as confidential rather than effectively as public information. However, it is not intended to require States to enact confidentiality statutes which are mirror images of the Federal statutes. The conference agreement makes it clear that State tax authorities can disclose State returns and return information, including any portion of the Federal return (or information reflected on the Federal return) which the State requires the taxpayer to attach to, or to include in, his State tax return, to any State or local officers or employees whose official duties or responsibilities require access to such State return or return information pursuant to the laws of such State.

The conference agreement also authorizes the GAO to review and evaluate the compliance by the Federal and State agencies which have received returns and return information from the IRS with the requirements regarding the use and safeguarding of the returns and return information.

The conference agreement modifies the disclosure of return information to the Federal, State and local child support enforcement offices by providing for disclosure of the information from IRS master files and permitting disclosure of other return information only to the extent that it cannot be reasonably obtained from another source.

The conference agreement authorizes the IRS to disclose to other Federal agencies the mailing addresses of taxpayers from whom the agencies are attempting to collect a claim under the Federal Claims Collection Act.

1203. Income Tax Return Preparers

House bill.—Present law provides that tax return preparers must sign returns they prepare, but no penalties are provided for failure to sign. Preparers are subject to criminal fraud penalties of fines up to $5,000 and 3 years' imprisonment for willfully aiding or assisting in the preparation of a fraudulent return. (Also, preparers are subject to penalties for improper disclosure of tax return information.)

Under the House bill, any person who prepares a return or claim for refund for compensation must meet specific disclosure requirements and is subject to penalties for negligent or fraudulent preparation of returns. Injunctions may be sought against preparers engaging in certain specified practices. The provision applies to documents prepared after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill with several modifications, including an exception for preparers of refund claims filed as a result of an IRS audit; authorization for the IRS to modify annual reporting requirements, provided detailed records and information are available and accessible to the Service. Also, the injunction provision is modified to establish more specifically the practices against which injunctive relief may be obtained. The amendment applies to documents prepared after December 31, 1976.

The conferees also clarified certain language that appears in the Finance Committee's Report relating to income tax return preparers. The amendment imposes a penalty for any understatement of tax liability caused by an income tax return preparer due to negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations. The conferees share the Finance Committee's intention, as stated in the Committee Report, that this provision be interpreted in a manner similar to existing section 6653(a) of the Code which imposes penalties for disregard of rules and regulations by taxpayers on their own returns. Consistent with section 6653(a), the Committee Report states that an income tax return preparer's good faith dispute about an interpretation of a statute is not considered negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations.

However, the Report of the Finance Committee goes on to state that an income tax return preparer may complete a return relying on case law that conflicts with rulings or regulations, "provided he clearly sets forth in the return the relevant rulings or regulations which he disputes and the judicial decision upon which he relies." Such disclosure is not required to avoid penalties under section 6653(a) of the Code, and the Committee did not intend that more stringent requirements be applied under the new section 6694(a). The conferees agree that while there may be instances in which some form of disclosure on a return would be necessary to avoid penalties under section 6694(a), that would depend on all the relevant facts and circumstances in the particular case, as is true under section 6653(a).

1204. Jeopardy and Termination Assessments

House bill.—Under present law, no court or administrative review is made of the appropriateness of a jeopardy or termination assessment. No restrictions are placed on sale of property seized pursuant to one type of jeopardy assessment. A termination assessment creates a "deficiency" and presumably short taxable years.

The House bill provides expedited Tax Court review of the appropriateness of jeopardy and termination assessments (and the amount thereof). It also provides restrictions on the sale of seized property until this review is completed. The provisions of the House bill apply to assessments where notice and demand take place after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is generally the same as the House bill but contains several modifications. The Senate amendment requires the Internal Revenue Service to furnish the taxpayer with a written statement setting forth the basis for a jeopardy or termination assessment within 5 days after the assessment is made, and provides for administrative review within an additional 15 days. The taxpayer may then obtain an expedited de novo determination of the reasonableness of the assessment by a United States District Court. The Commissioner has the burden of proof on whether it is reasonable for a jeopardy or termination assessment to stand, but the taxpayer has the burden of proof on the reasonableness of the amount assessed. In the case of termination assessments, the Senate amendment provides for notice of deficiency to the taxpayer only after the close of the normal taxable year and for no closing or reopening of a taxpayer's taxable year. The Senate amendment imposes the same restrictions on sale of seized property with respect to jeopardy assessments as the House bill, but the restrictions are broadened in the case of termination assessments. These provisions of the Senate amendment apply to assessments where the notice and demand take place after December 31, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. In the court review of a jeopardy or termination assessment, the conference agreement places the burden of proof on the government as to whether the making of the jeopardy or termination assessment is reasonable under the circumstances, but places the burden of proof on the taxpayer as to the reasonableness of the amount assessed. The Report of the Committee on Finance (S. Rept. 94–938, p. 365) analogizes this division of the burden of proof to the division in a civil tax fraud case where the government has the burden of proof on the fraud issue, and the taxpayer the burden on the issue of a deficiency in tax. The analogy was used only to explain the division; neither the Committee on Finance nor the conferees intend that the government must carry its burden of proof in the court review of a jeopardy or termination assessment under the special evidentiary standard of proof applicable to proving civil fraud, i.e., "clear and convincing evidence." Rather, the usual standard is to apply, as it does where the government is given the burden of proof in a deficiency case on a tax issue it failed to raise in its notice of deficiency.

1205. Administrative Summons

House bill.—The House bill provides generally, in the case of a third party summons, the taxpayer (or other person to whom the summoned records pertain) is to receive notice of the summons from the Service at the time of its issuance and have the right to stay compliance by notifying the person summoned within 14 days not to comply with the summons. The Service is then required to seek enforcement of the summons in a Federal court and the taxpayer has standing to challenge such enforcement. Notice is not required in the case of an administrative summons to a bank issued in connection with IRS collection activities. In the case of a John Doe summons (where the identity of the taxpayer is not known) the Service must go into court, establish reasonable cause for requesting the summons, and receive court approval before issuing the summons.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is generally similar to the House bill except that it permits the Service a 3-day grace period to mail the notice to the taxpayer. The amendment also provides for suspension of the criminal statute of limitations (as well as the civil statute, which is suspended under the House bill) where the summons is protested by the taxpayer. The amendment suspends the notice requirement where a summons is issued solely to determine if records exist or where notice may result in a material interference in an investigation. The amendment is intended to enable the Service to avoid material interference with an investigation where it reasonably believes that this might occur; however, petitions by the Service are not to be granted automatically by the courts and the petitions (and supporting affidavits) must show reasonable cause. The amendment also provides for the reimbursement of witness costs in accordance with regulations.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. In addition, the agreement clarifies the definition of a third-party record keeper, limiting this category to attorneys, accountants, banks, trust companies, credit unions, savings and loan institutions, credit reporting agencies, issuers of credit cards, and brokers in stock or other securities. The conference agreement makes it clear that the criminal and civil statutes of limitations are to be suspended where the notice who protests enforcement of the summons is either the taxpayer himself (as under the House and Senate bills), his nominee or agent, or another person actually under the direction or control of the taxpayer. A corporation controlled by the taxpayer, for example, is covered under this rule. On the other hand, if the third-party record keeper (attorney, accountant, bank, etc.) protested enforcement of the summons, this would not suspend the statute of limitations with respect to the taxpayer because the third-party recordkeeper is not the noticee. (Also, these persons ordinarily would not be under the actual direction or control of the taxpayer.) The conference agreement also provides that the Service is not required to give notice or to follow the "John Doe" procedure where the purpose of the inquiry is simply to learn the identity of the person maintaining a numbered bank account (or similar arrangement). For purposes of these rules, a numbered bank account (or similar arrangement) is an account through which a person may authorize transactions solely through the use of a number, symbol, code name or other device not involving the disclosure of his identity. A person maintaining the account includes the person who established it and any person authorized to use the account or to receive records or statements concerning the account.

1206. Assessments in case of mathematical or clerical errors

House bill.—Under present law, where a tax deficiency results from a mathematical error, the taxpayer does not have a right to appeal to the Tax Court, as provided in other cases. In practice, the Internal Revenue Service allows the taxpayer time to explain and substantiate a claim that there is no error. The Service has applied the mathematical errors procedure in 5 general categories of mistakes, only one of which literally involves arithmetic miscalculations.

The House bill defines five sets of mathematical or clerical errors, and the procedure and timetable which is to be followed before the Service may assess a deficiency. Under the procedure, the taxpayer must be given an explanation of the error and time to file a request for abatement of the assessment. The Service may not assess a deficiency before the taxpayer has agreed to it or the specified period has expired. The provision covers: (1) arithmetic errors; (2) errors in transferring amounts on the tax forms; (3) missing schedules or forms; (4) inconsistent entries and computations; and (5) entries that exceed statutory limitations. The timetable allows (1) the taxpayer 90 days from date of notice to file a request for abatement, (2) the Service 60 days to abate or renew the assessment, and (3) the taxpayer another 30 days to demand abatement. This provision applies to returns filed after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment modifies the House provision by allowing 60 days for the taxpayer to file a request for abatement. If such a request is filed, the Service must abate the assessment; the Service then may assert a deficiency. The amendment applies to returns filed after December 31, 1976.

1207(a). Withholding State Income Taxes From Military Personnel

House bill.—Under present law. Federal withholding of State income taxes from military personnel is prohibited. The House bill provides for Federal withholding of State income taxes where requested by a member of the military. Such withholding is to be implemented within 120 days of enactment.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that withholding is mandatory rather than voluntary.

1207(b). Withholding of State or Local Income Tax From Members of the National Guard or Ready Reserve

House bill.—Under present law, withholding of State or local income tax from members of the National Guard or ready reserve by the Federal Government is prohibited. The House bill requires the Federal Government to withhold in those cases when the State and local income taxes are paid for regular training. Withholding is to be implemented within 120 days of the date of enactment.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement is the same as the House bill and the Senate amendment.

1207(c). Voluntary Withholding of State Income Taxes From Federal Employees

House bill.—The House bill contains no provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, Federal withholding of State income taxes from Federal employees in States where withholding is voluntary is prohibited. The Senate amendment permits Federal withholding of State income taxes from Federal employees in States where it is voluntary when employees request it. This withholding is to be implemented within 120 days of date of enactment.

1207(d). Withholding of Income Tax on Certain Gambling Winnings

House bill.—Under present law, withholding of Federal income tax from gambling winnings is not required although information reports must be submitted on winnings of $600 or more. The House bill imposes withholding at a 20-percent rate on winnings of more than $1,000 from sweepstakes, wagering pools, and lotteries and from other types of gambling if the odds are 300 to 1 or more. The withholding applies to wagers made after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that it does not apply to winnings from slot machines, keno, and bingo, or from State-conducted lotteries. This withholding applies to wagers made after September 30, 1977.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that the exemption for State-conducted lotteries applies only to winnings of $5,000 or less, and the withholding begins to apply 90 days after date of enactment. State-conducted sweepstakes and wagering pools are not included in the $5,000 exemption, but rather are treated the same as privately-conducted sweepstakes and wagering pools (and thus are subject to withholding on any net winnings exceeding $1,000). Under the conference agreement, it is intended that the term "wagering pool" is to include all pari-mutuel betting pools, including on- and off-track racing pools, and similar types of betting pools.

The .conference agreement also makes it clear that withholding applies to winnings net of the ticket price, taking into account all tickets for identical wagers. For example, if one $100 bet and two $50 bets are placed on a single horse to win a single racetrack event, any winnings from the three tickets should be added together and the ticket prices of all three tickets should be deducted to determine net winnings. However, if the bets are placed on different horses or on different events, the net winnings are to be determined separately for each ticket.

In addition, under the conference agreement, the Internal Revenue Service is to report, prior to 1979, to the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance on the operation of the present reporting system (IRS Form 1099) as applied to winnings from keno, bingo, and slot machine winnings and is to make a recommendation whether or not such winnings should be subject to withholding. The conferees also urge that, in the interim, the Internal Revenue Service modify the reporting requirements (on IRS form 1099) with respect to winnings from these sources. This modification should include a lower threshold for the requirement that the payor report payments to the Internal Revenue Service to the extent that current reporting practices differ from that set out in the Internal Revenue Code (sec. 6041).

1207(e). Withholding of Federal Taxes on Certain Individuals Engaged in Fishing

Senate amendment.—Under present law, crewmen on boats taking fish or other forms of aquatic animal life are usually treated, for tax purposes, as regular employees, not as self-employed. Under the Senate amendment, crewmen on boats engaged in taking fish or other aquatic animal life with an operating crew of fewer than ten are to be treated as self-employed for Federal tax purposes if their sole remuneration is a share of the boat's catch (or the proceeds of the catch), or, in the case of an operation involving more than one boat, a share of the entire fleet's catch. This provision is to apply, in general, to services performed after December 31, 1971, in taxable years ending after that date.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but modifies the amendment to require boat operators to report the weight of the catch distributed to each crewman, or, in cases of distributions of proceeds of the catch, the dollar amount distributed to each crewman. In addition, the retroactive date of the provision is not to result in requiring crewmen who have been treated as ordinary employees to pay the higher rate of social security tax required of self-employed individuals, nor are refunds of the employer's share of social security taxes to be made to boat operators in such cases. Otherwise, the provision is applicable to services performed after December 31, 1971.

Because the status of individuals as independent contractors or employees for Federal tax purposes presents an increasingly important problem of tax administration, the conferees agreed to join in the request of the Senate Finance Committee (S. Rept. 94–938, p. 604) that the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation make a general study of this area. The conferees also join in urging the Internal Revenue Service not to apply any changed position or any newly stated position which is inconsistent with a prior general audit position in this general subject area to past, as opposed to future taxable years until the requested staff study has been completed. Thus, the conferees agree with the statements on this aspect of the subject in the Finance Committee's Report (S. Rept. 94–938, p. 604), as amplified by the Chairman and ranking member of the Finance Committee on July 26, 1976, during consideration of H.R. 10612 by the Senate.

The conferees also make it clear that the designation of fishermen as "self-employed" is for the specific tax purpose only. It is not intended to affect their rights to bargain collectively or their status under the antitrust or other laws.

1208. State-Conducted Lotteries

House bill.—Under present law, an excise tax of 2 percent is placed on amounts wagered, and an annual occupational tax of $500 is imposed on each person who is liable for the wagering tax. In addition, a tax of $250 per year is imposed on coin gaming devices including those which dispense lottery tickets. An exemption is provided for sweepstakes or lotteries conducted by a State where the winners are determined by a horse race.

The House bill eliminates the rule that a winner of State lotteries be determined by a horse race and an exemption from the tax on gambling devices is provided for State lotteries. The change is effective for wagers made, or periods after, March 10, 1964.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement is the same as the House bill and the Senate amendment.

1209. Minimum Exemption From Levy For Wages, Salary, and Other Income

House bill.—Present law enumerates a relatively limited list of items of a taxpayer which are exempt from levy for taxes. These exempt items include unemployment benefits but not wages, salary, or other income (except that needed to pay pre-levy court-ordered child support). Present law also requires repeated levies in cases involving wages and salaries.

The House bill exempts from levy for taxes a minimum amount ($50 on a weekly basis, plus $15 per dependent) of wages, salary, or other income. It also allows continuous levies wages and salaries.

These provisions of the House bill apply to levies made after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that it applies to levies made after December 31, 1976.

1210. Joint Committee Refund Cases

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a report concerning refunds of income, estate, gift and other types of taxes must be submitted to the Joint Committee on Taxation if the refund is in excess of $100,000.

The Senate amendment increases the jurisdictional amount for Joint Committee refund cases to $200,000. Also, the amendment adds refunds of taxes on private foundations and pension plans as subject to the report requirements and authorizes the Chief of Staff of the Joint Committee to conduct a post-audit review of other cases. The amendment is effective generally upon date of enactment, except that the post-audit review provision is effective on January 1, 1977.

1211. Use of Social Security Numbers

House bill.—Under present law, a person required to file an income tax return must include an identifying number in his return; in general, individuals use their social security numbers for this purpose. It is a misdemeanor to willfully, knowingly, and deceitfully use a social security number for purposes relating to obtaining or increasing the amount of benefits under a Social Security Act or other Federally funded program. Under the Privacy Act of 1974, it is unlawful for any Federal, State or local government agency to deny to any individual any right, benefit, or privilege provided by law because of the individual's refusal to disclose his social security account number, unless: (1) disclosure is required by Federal statute, or (2) disclosure is required by a Federal, State or local agency under statute or regulation adopted prior to January 1, 1975.

The House bill amends the Code to require use of a social security number as the taxpayer identifying number for Federal income tax purposes.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment requires that, except as otherwise specified under regulations, an individual shall use his social security number for Federal income tax purposes. It also makes a misdemeanor the willful, knowing, and deceitful use of a social security number for any purpose.

In addition, the Senate amendment changes the Privacy Act so that a State or political subdivision may use social security numbers for the purpose of establishing the identification of individuals affected by any tax, general public assistance, driver's license, and motor vehicle registration laws. If the State or local Government did not use the social security number for identification under a law or regulation adopted prior to January 1, 1975, it may require an individual to furnish his social security number solely for the purpose of administering tax laws, as well as general public assistance, driver's license and motor vehicle registration laws, and also for the purpose of responding to requests for information from an agency operating pursuant to the provisions of parts A and D of Title IV of the Social Security Act. Any individual who discloses, uses, or compels the disclosure of the social security number of any person in violation of the laws of the U.S. is guilty of a misdemeanor.

1212. Interest on Mathematical Errors on Returns Prepared by IRS

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, interest on any underpayment of tax runs from the original due date (regardless of extensions) to the date on which payment is received. The Senate amendment provides that in the case of an income tax deficiency attributable to a mathematical error on a return prepared by an IRS taxpayer service representative, interest will not begin to run until the 30th day after notice and demand for payment of the deficiency, provided the deficiency did not result from a failure by the taxpayer to provide information to the IRS taxpayer service representative or from a willful misrepresentation of information by the taxpayer. This provision applies to returns filed for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement authorizes the IRS to abate any portion of interest owed by a taxpayer as a result of a mathematical error on returns prepared by the Internal Revenue Service where the amounts in question are below tolerance levels established by the IRS. The two principal factors to be taken into account by the IRS in establishing the tolerance levels are (1) the cost of determining, assessing, and collecting the interest and (2) sound and equitable tax administration.

SECTIONS OMITTED FROM SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 25

Definitions of City for Purposes of Withholding for Federal Employees

House bill.—No provision in H.R. 10612. However, a separate House-passed bill (H.R. 10572) provides that the Federal Government may withhold city income taxes for certain unincorporated localities.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment modifies the definition of city for withholding purposes as in H.R. 10572.

Voluntary Withholding of State Income Taxes for Certain Legislative Officers and Employees

House bill.—The House bill requires the paying officers for the House of Representatives to enter into agreements with requesting States to withhold State income tax from any Member or House employees who request it. (Subsequent to the Committee's action, the House passed H. Res. 732 which provides for the voluntary withholding of State income taxes for House Members, officers and employees.)

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision, as the provision has been separately adopted by the House of Representatives (H. Res. 732).

Award of Costs and Attorneys Fees to Prevailing Taxpayer

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, there is no specific provision regarding costs and fees for tax litigation. However, the prevailing party in any civil litigation brought in the Federal District Courts by or against the U.S. Government may recover costs, but not attorneys' fees or expenses.

The Senate amendment provides that a prevailing taxpayer in any civil tax litigation may be awarded costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees up to $10,000, but only if it is found that it was unreasonable for the U.S. Government to bring the action. The amendment applies to civil actions and proceedings for redetermination of deficiencies commenced after the date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

1301. Certain Housing Associations

House bill.—Under present law most cooperative housing corporations, condominium management associations and residential real estate management associations cannot qualify for exempt status.

The House bill provides that a cooperative housing corporation, condominium management association, or residential real estate management association may elect to be tax exempt with respect to its membership dues and assessments. On other income, an electing organization is taxed at corporate rates without the surtax exemption. This provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is generally the same as the House bill, except that cooperative housing corporations are not permitted to elect. Technical amendments are made in the definitions of association property, qualifying expenditures, and qualifying purposes. The Senate amendment also allows a cooperative housing corporation to take depreciation on property leased to tenant-stockholders, even though the tenant-stockholder in a cooperative housing corporstock, if they use the proprietary lease or right of tenancy to which the stock is allocable in a trade or business or for the production of income. The Senate amendment also modifies the present law rule that a tenant-stockholders in a cooperative housing corporation must be an individual by permitting a lending institution which obtains stock in a cooperative housing corporation through foreclosure to be treated as a tenant-stockholder for up to three years. The Senate amendment generally applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973. However, the provision relating to foreclosures by lending institutions applies to stock acquired after the date of enactment.

1302. Treatment of Certain Crop Disaster Payments

House bill.—Under present law insurance proceeds received by a taxpayer as a result of destruction or damage to crops may be included in income in the taxable year following the year of their receipt, if it can be established that the income from the crops which were destroyed or damaged would otherwise have been properly included in income in the following taxable year. The House bill extends this provision to taxpayers using the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting who receive certain payments pursuant to the Agricultural Act of 1949 if such payments are received as a result of (1) destruction or damage to crops caused by drought, flood or any other natural disaster, or (2) the inability to plant crops because of such a natural disaster. The provision is effective for payments received after December 31, 1973, in taxable years ending after that date.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreeement.—The conference agreement is the same as the House bill and the Senate amendment.

1303. Tax Treatment of Certain 1972 Disaster Losses

House bill.—In the case of a 1972 disaster loss in a Presidentially designated disaster relief area, the tax on the first $5,000 of compensation received with respect to that loss is not to exceed the tax which would have been payable if the $5,000 (or lesser) deduction had not been claimed. This treatment applies only if elected by the taxpayer and only if certain conditions are satisfied. Any tax with respect to this $5,000 amount which was still unpaid on October 1, 1975, may be paid in three equal annual installments beginning on April 15, 1976.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that the first annual installment of tax liability still unpaid on October 1, 1975, is not due until April 15, 1977.

1304. Worthless Debts of Political Parties

House bill.—The House bill allows a deduction for worthless debts owed by political parties if the debts arise from bona fide sales of goods or services in the ordinary course of a trade or busines, if more than 30 percent of the total business is with political parties, and if substantial efforts are made to collect the debt. The House bill applies for taxable years beginning after 1974 and to all prior open years.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that the amendment applies for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees agreed that the provision of present law was not intended to apply to taxpayers whose primary business is to provide goods or services to political parties and that the conference agreement reflects Congress' original intent regarding present law.

1305. Tax-Exempt Bonds for Student Loans

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, only interest on obligations issued by or on behalf of governmental entities such as States and their political subdivisions is exempt from Federal income taxation. In addition, even these obligations are generally not exempt if the proceeds might be used to purchase nonexempt securities or obligations whose yield will likely exceed the yield on the governmental obligations. Under the Senate amendment, obligations are to be exempt from tax if issued by nonprofit corporations organized or requested to act by a State or a political subdivision solely to acquire student loan notes. Student loan incentive payments made by the Commissioner of Education are not to be taken into account in determining whether the yield on student loan notes is higher than the yield on obligations issued to finance the student loan program. The provision is effective for obligations issued on or after the date of enactment.

1306. Personal Holding Company Amendments

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, royalties (other than mineral, oil or gas royalties and copyright royalties) received by a corporation are personal holding company income, regardless of how much income of other types the corporation may have. "Royalties" include amounts received for a license to use trade brands, secret processes, franchises and similar intangible property. Rents received by a corporation from leasing corporate "property" to a 25-percent or greater shareholder are personal holding income, only if over 10 percent of the company's income comes from other types of personal holding company income. In Rev. Rul. 71-596, 1971-2 Cum. Bull. 242, the IRS ruled that a company's income from licensing a major shareholder to make and sell a secret process is governed by the "royalty" rule rather than by the "rent" rule.

The Senate amendment treats intangible property as property subject to the shareholder rent rule, rather than the royalty rule, if the intangible property is used together with tangible property in an active trade or business conducted by the major shareholder who leases such intangible property from the corporation. The amendment applies to taxable years ending after December 31, 1964, and before January 1, 1972. No interest is to be paid on any refund received by a taxpayer under the amendment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement deletes the retroactive provision in the Senate amendment. In its place, the shareholder rent rule (of section 543(a)(6)) is amended to apply only to tangible property leased by a corporation to one or more of its major shareholders. (Even if income received by the corporation from renting tangible property to a major shareholder qualifies (under the tests in section 543(a)(6)), as nonpersonal holding company income, such income also constitutes rental income for purposes of the general rent rules in section 543(a)(2) and, as such, must also be tested under those rules.)

This amendment clarifies the shareholder rent rule, which has been interpreted by the courts to mean that amounts received by a corporation from leasing intangible property to a major shareholder are to be treated as royalty income (under sec. 543(a)(1)), regardless of whether such income also qualifies under the shareholder rent rule of sec. 543(a)(6). The amendment makes clear that income from the use of secret processes, trade brands and other intangible property (but not including certain specially-treated royalties), are always to be treated as personal holding company income under the general royalty rule (sec. 543(a)(1)), regardless of whether they are received from a shareholder of the corporation or from an unrelated third party.

The conference agreement provides, however, that solely for purposes of determining (under section 543(a)(6), as amended) whether over 10 percent of the corporation's income is derived from personal holding company income, income from a lease of intangible property to a 25 percent or greater shareholder is not to be treated as personal holding company income. This special rule will apply only if the shareholder leases tangible property from the corporation a substantial amount of which he uses, along with the intangible property, in the active conduct of a trade or business.

The conference agreement also provides that even if income received by the corporation from renting tangible property to a major shareholder qualifies (under the tests in section 543(a)(6) as amended) as nonpersonal holding company income, such income also constitutes rental income from purposes of the general rent rules in section 543(a)(2) of present law and, as such, must also be tested under those rules.

Under the conference agreement, the provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

1307. Work Incentive (WIN) and Federal Welfare Recipient Employment Tax Credits

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the work incentive (WIN) credit, equal to 20 percent of the wages paid during the first 12 months of employment to qualified AFDC recipients, is available to employers engaged in a trade or business who hired such employees. Qualified participants are certified by the local WIN agency. The credit is not available in the case of an employee who ceases to work for the original employer for an additional 12 months unless the employee voluntarily quits, becomes disabled, or is fired for misconduct. The amount of the credit available in any year is limited to the first $25,000 of tax plus one-half of tax liability in excess of $25,000. Under the Federal welfare recipient employment incentive tax credit (welfare recipient tax credit), which expired July 1, 1976, all private employers including those who provide employment for private household workers are eligible for the credit. Qualified employees are AFDC recipients who have received benefits for the 90 days preceding employment. The credit is essentially the same as the WIN credit: 20 percent of eligible wages, except that there is a limit of $5,000 a year on the annual eligible wages for non-business employees; the same overall credit limit of $25,000 of tax plus one-half of the excess also applies. There is no limit on the number of months the credit is available. The State or local welfare agency certifies recipients as qualified.

The Senate amendment makes the WIN credit available from the date of hiring if employment is not terminated without cause before the end of 90 days after the first 90 days of employment, and adds an additional exemption to the recapture rules so that there would be no recapture of the credit if the employee were laid off due to lack of business. It doubles the limit on the credit from $25,000 to $50,000 plus one-half of the excess over $50,000. The Senate amendment also doubles the limit on the welfare recipient tax credit from $25,000 to $50,000 plus one-half of the excess over $50,000. It provides a limit of 12 months for which the wages of any one employee would be eligible for the credit. The amendment authorizes the WIN agencies also to certify eligibility for the welfare recipient tax credit. The amendment extends the expiration date from July 1, 1976, to January 1, 1981.

1308. Repeal of Excise Tax on Certain Light-Duty Truck Parts

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, an 8-percent manufacturers excise tax applies to the sale of truck parts and accessories. However, no tax is imposed on such parts when included on a light-duty truck (10,000 lbs. or less) by the truck manufacturer, since the excise tax on light-duty trucks was repealed in 1971. If the part is added by a dealer (and is not considered to be "further manufacture"), the 8-percent tax applies. Under the Senate amendment, the 8-percent excise tax on truck parts and accessories is to be refunded or credited to the manufacturer where the part or accessory is sold on or in connection with the first retail sale of a light-duty truck. The provision applies to sales after the date of enactment.

1309. Exemption From Manufacturers Excise Tax for Certain Articles Resold After Modifications

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a 10-percent manufacturers excise tax is imposed on sales of bodies and chassis for heavy trucks, buses not used for mass transport, heavy trailers and semitrailers, and highway tractors. An 8-percent tax is imposed on sales of parts or accessories for trucks and buses. Persons who obtain bodies or chassis and certain parts or accessories from different manufacturers and combine them are considered further manufacturers and must pay a 10-percent tax on their further sale, after credit for tax previously paid. Persons who buy the entire combination from a single manufacturer do not pay a manufacturers excise tax on a further sale.

Under the Senate amendment, a resale of an article subject to the 10-percent tax is not to be taxed merely because the article was combined with any coupling device, wrecker crane, loading and unloading equipment, aerial ladder or tower, snow and ice control equipment, earthmoving, excavation and construction equipment, spreader, sleeper cab, cab shield, or wood or metal floor. The provision applies to resale on or after the date of enactment.

1310. Franchise Transfers

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the transfer of a franchise, trademark or trade name is not the sale or exchange of a capital asset if the transferor retains any significant power, right, or continuing interest with respect to the subject matter of the franchise, trademark, or trade name. No statutory rule prevents avoidance of this limitation through the use of partnerships. The Senate amendment adds a provision treating potential ordinary income from a franchise, trademark or trade name as an "unrealized receivable" of a partnership. The effect is to apply to partnerships the same rule that currently applies to sole proprietorships. This provision is effective for transactions occurring after December 31, 1976, in taxable years ending after that date.

1311. Employer's Duties To Keep Records and To Report Tips

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, employees must report to employers all tips received, including charge account tips. Employers must include such tips in reporting to the IRS the employees' wages subject to withholding. The IRS has recently ruled that sec. 6041(a) of the Code requires employers to report separately to the IRS charge account tips not reported to employers by employees and therefore not reported to IRS by employers as wages subject to withholding.'

Under the Senate amendment, employers need only report to IRS the tips, including charge account tips, reported to the employers by their employees. In addition, the only records employers are required to retain in connection with charge account tips are statements of tips received furnished by their employees and charge receipts.

Conference agreement.—Under the conference agreement, the IRS is not to take action to enforce its recent rulings on these matters before 1979. Thus, the charge tip reporting rules are to be administered during this period as they were prior to the recent rulings. This provision is not intended to affect the Service's ability to effect audits in the area of tip income.

1312. Treatment of Certain Pollution Control Facilities

Senate amendment.—From 1969 through December 31, 1975, an election for 5-year amortization was available to a taxpayer who installed a new identifiable, certified pollution facility in connection with property that was in operation before January 1, 1969. The amortizable basis of the facility was not eligible for the investment tax credit. The Senate amendment provides a 5-year amortization election for facilities installed in property in the past, makes amortization available for facilities that will prevent the creation or emission of pollutants, and provides a two-thirds investment credit for such facilities placed in service after December 31, 1976. The extension of the 5-year amortization election and its availability for preventive facilities apply for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975. The investment credit provision applies for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modifications that extend the election to facilities that will prevent the creation or emission of pollutants when installed at the site of a plant or other property in existence before January 1, 1976, which do not lead to a significant increase in output or capacity, a significant extension of useful life, or a significant reduction in total operating costs for such plant or other property (or any unit thereof), or a significant alteration in the nature of a manufacturing or production process or facility. For the purposes of this provision, significant means a change of more than 5 percent. Only one-half of the investment tax credit will be available for such pollution control facilities. In determining how significant is the effect of a pollution control facility upon output, capacity, costs or useful life of property, the relevant area for examination is to be the operating unit most directly associated with the pollution control facility. The conference agreement also provides that the broader definition of a pollution control facility which is eligible for the amortization election does not apply in determining whether a facility is a pollution control facility eligible for tax-exempt industrial development bond financing.

The conference agreement extends the definition of a qualified pollution control facility to include, for example, a facility located at a plant site which prevents the creation of a pollutant by removing sulphur from fuel before it is burned at the plant. The definition also includes such facilities as a recovery boiler that removes pollutants from material at some point in the otherwise unchanged production process at the plant. The conference agreement does not include as a qualified pollution control facility a facility that makes a significant change in a, or functions as a new, manufacturing or production process or facility. Where a plant that has employed heat to process a material changes to an electrolytic process, the latter is not a qualified pollution control facility because it is also a new manufacturing or production process even though it may prevent the creation and emission of pollutants.

1313. Qualification of Fishing Organizations as Tax-Exempt Agricultural Organizations

Senate amendment.—Under present law, fishing organizations may qualify as tax-exempt business leagues, but not as tax-exempt agricultural organizations. Tax-exempt agricultural organizations receive lower postal rates than do tax-exempt business leagues. Under the Senate amendment, the term "agricultural", for tax purposes, is to include the harvesting of aquatic resources. The provision is to be effective for all taxable years beginning after December 31, 1972.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, but the rule is to be effective only for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

1314. Subchapter S Corporation Shareholder Rules

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a corporation is required to have 10 or fewer shareholders in order to be eligible to elect and maintain subchapter S treatment.

Under the Senate amendment, 15 shareholders are allowed after the corporation has elected subchapter S treatment for 5 consecutive taxable years. In addition, a corporation may have up to 15 shareholders during this 5-year period if the additional shareholders have acquired their interests through inheritance. Also, where a husband and wife were treated as one shareholder, the surviving spouse and the deceased spouse's estate are treated as one shareholder. The amendments are effective with tax years beginning after December 31, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that it deletes the provisions under which a surviving spouse and the estate of a deceased spouse may be treated as 1 shareholder, since this provision is duplicated in another Senate amendment adopted by the conferees (Senate amendment numbered 62, section 2722).

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Section 6013(e) of the Code, enacted January 12, 1971, relieves a spouse from tax liability for income omitted from a tax return, if he or she is not responsible for the omission and did not benefit from the unreported income. The Senate amendment extends relief under the innocent spouse provision to taxpayers who, but for the res judicata effect of an adverse judicial decision, would have been relieved of liability under the 1971 statute. The amendment applies to all taxable years beginning after December 31, 1961, and ending on or before January 12, 1971, and is effective until the end of the first calendar year following the date of enactment.

1316. Modification in Limitations on Percentage Depletion for Oil and Gas Wells

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law, adopted as part of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975, generally repeals percentage depletion for oil and gas but provides a limited exemption from repeal for taxpayers who are neither refiners nor retailers. In any event, percentage depletion is disallowed on proven property transferred after 1974. Also, percentage depletion on oil and gas is limited to 65 percent of the taxpayer's taxable income.

The Senate amendment modifies these provisions in certain respects to correct certain technical problems in connection with these provisions and to prevent instances of unintended hardship. Under the amendment, a taxpayer is not to be treated as a retailer in cases where gross sales of oil and gas products attributable to the taxpayer are less than $5 million in any one year. Also, bulk sales of oil or natural gas to industrial or utility customers are not to be treated as retail sales. Likewise, a taxpayer is not to be treated as a retailer, if all sales of oil or natural gas products occur outside the United States, and none of the taxpayer's domestic production is exported.

In addition, the amendment provides that oil or natural gas property is not to be treated as "transferred" property merely because there is a change in beneficiaries under a trust if the change occurs by reason of births, adoptions, or deaths involving a single family. Also, trusts are permitted to compute the 65 percent of taxable income limitation without regard to any deduction for distributions to beneficiaries. The rules outlined above are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1974 (which is also the effective date of the provisions in the Tax Reduction Act of 1975).

1317. Implementation of Federal-State Tax Collection Act of 1972

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under current law, a State whose individual income tax substantially conforms to the Federal individual income tax may enter into an agreement with the Internal Revenue Service for the IRS to collect and administer the State tax. At least two States with 5 percent of the Federal individual tax returns must elect to have their taxes "piggybacked" for the piggyback system to be generally available. The Senate amendment makes explicit that no costs will be charged to any State for "piggybacking": reduces to one the number of States necessary to start the system; and eliminates the requirement that 5 percent or more of Federal returns be initially involved in triggering the system. Also, it permits certain adjustments for State sales tax credits. The amendment takes effect upon the date of enactment.

1318. Cancellation of Certain Student Loans

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, gross income includes income from discharge of indebtedness. Gross income does not include amounts received as a scholarship or fellowship grant at an educational institution, unless such amounts represent compensation for services or are primarily for the benefit of the grantor. The Service has ruled that discharge of indebtedness on student loans issued after June 11, 1973, are includable in gross income.

The Senate amendment provides that no amount shall be included in gross income by reason of the discharge of all or part of a student loan if, pursuant to the loan agreement, such discharge is made if the individual works for a certain period of time in certain geographical areas or for certain classes of employers. This provision applies only to loans made by a governmental agency. The provision is effective for discharges of indebtedness made before January 1, 1979.

1319. Simultaneous Liquidation of Parent and Subsidiary Corporations

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a corporation which sells its assets and liquidates completely within 12 months generally is not taxable on gain from its sale of assets. Its shareholders, however, are taxable on the liquidation proceeds they receive. The selling company in this situation is taxable, however, if it is a controlled subsidiary of a parent corporation. In this latter situation, the parent corporation is not taxable when it liquidates the subsidiary. If both the parent and the subsidiary plan to liquidate after the subsidiary sells its assets, however, two taxes may be imposed. The subsidiary may be taxed on its gain from the sale and the parent's shareholders may also be taxable when the parent liquidates.

The Senate amendment adds a rule that if a controlled subsidiary sells its assets and then both it and its parent corporation liquidate completely, only one tax will be imposed and that will fall only on the parent's shareholders. This rule would be effective for sales of assets under a plan of complete liquidation adopted on or after January 1, 1976.

1320. Prepublication Expenditures

House bill.—Under present law, IRS regulations and Revenue Ruling 73-395, 1973-2 Cum. Bull. 87, deny a current deduction for research in connection with literary, historical, or similar projects. The ruling requires that publishers' prepublication expenditures must be capitalized and may be depreciated. The House bill, which applies to all open years, allows publishers to continue their customary, consistent tax accounting methods regarding prepublication expenditures without regard to Revenue Ruling 73-395 until the IRS issues new, prospective regulation.

Conferece agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill with necessary technical changes.

1321. Contributions in aid of Construction for Certain Utilities

House bill.—The House bill contains no provision.

Senate amendment.—Under a recent revenue ruling by the IRS, certain contributions in aid of costruction are treated as income rather than nontaxable contributions to the capital of a utility. The Senate amendment treats certain contributions in aid of construction to water and sewage disposal utilities as nontaxable contributions to capital if cash contributions are spent for qualifying water or sewage disposal facilities before the end of the second taxable year following the year the contribution was received. This provision is effective for contributions made after January 31, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with two modifications. Under the first modification, nontaxable treatment will not be accorded to customer connection fees. Customer connection fees include any payments made by a customer to the utility for the cost of installing the connection between the customer's property and the utility's main water or sewer lines (including the cost of meters and piping) and any amounts paid as service charges for stopping or starting service.

Where a utility receives a lump-sum amount as a payment for items which qualify for nontaxable treatment under this provision and for items which do not so qualify (such as customer connection fees), then the portion which qualifies for nontaxable treatment under this provision is to be determined on a case by case basis under the facts and circumstances of each case. In addition, the mere fact that the applicable rate-making authority classifies an amount received by a utility as an amount for which nontaxable treatment is permitted is not conclusive of nontaxable treatment if such amounts actually are for items for which nontaxable treatment is not permitted.

Under the second modification, a requirement is added to insure that nontaxable treatment is accorded to only those utilities that are required to serve the public.

In providing these special rules for water and sewage disposal companies, the conferees intend that no inference should be drawn as to the proper treatment of such items by companies which are not water or sewage disposal utilities.

1322. Prohibition of Discriminatory State or Local Taxes on Generation or Transmission of Electricity

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, any restrictions on the power of States or their political subdivisions to tax goods or services produced in the taxing State for nondomiciliary use outside the taxing State are derived from court interpretations of the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution.

The Senate amendment prohibits any State or political subdivision of a State from directly or indirectly imposing any tax on the generation or transmission of electricity which discriminates against out-of-State users. This provision is effective for taxable years beginning after June 30, 1974.

1323. Deduction for Cost of Removing Architectural and Transportation Barriers for the Handicapped and Elderly

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Generally, costs incurred to improve property used in a trade or business must be capitalized and may be depreciated over the useful life of the property. The Senate amendment provides an elective current deduction for the removal of architectural and transportation barriers to the handicapped and elderly in any facility or public transportation vehicle owned or leased for use in a trade or business. A second Senate amendment defines handicapped individuals to include the deaf and blind. The barrier removal must meet government standards. The maximum deduction is $25,000 per taxpayer for any taxable year. The amendment is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976, and ending before January 1, 1980.

1324. Reports on High-Income Taxpayers

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment instructs the Secretary of the Treasury to publish statistics on the tax liability of people with high total income, including the number and average income of high-income people with no income tax liability (after credits); the specific deductions, exclusions and credits used to avoid tax; the overall number of high-income individuals; and the total income and tax liability of the high-income group. Income, for this purpose, shall approximate real, economic income and shall include at least two adjustments: (1) adjusted gross income (AGI) shall be reduced by investment income and expense to the extent it does not exceed investment income; and (2) tax preference items excluded or deducted in arriving at AGI shall be added back into income for this purpose.

Also, the amendment directs the President to estimate in his annual economic report the change for the previous calendar year in the real tax burden resulting from the effect of inflation in eroding the real value of fixed dollar amounts used in determining tax rates, and to project the change for the current calendar year. This tax change is to be estimated separately for the major sources of Federal revenues.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on the report on high-income individuals, although it directs the Secretary to make the adjustments for investment interest and tax preferences separately, as well as together so that there will be three definitions of "total income." The conference agreement deletes the direction to the President to make a report on the inflation-induced tax increase, but the conference committee urges the President to publish such information.

1325. Tax Treatment of Certified Historic Structures

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the original users of depreciable real property constructed after July 24, 1969, are allowed to depreciate the property using accelerated methods of depreciation, including the 150 percent declining balance method (200 percent in the case of residential rental property). The Senate amendment provides that accelerated depreciation methods are not allowed with respect to real property constructed on a site which had been occupied by a certified historic structure which was demolished or substantially altered (other than by virtue of a certified rehabilitation). A "certified historic structure" is defined as a depreciable building or structure which is (a) listed in the National Register, (b) located in a Registered Historic District and is certified by the Secretary of the Interior as being of historic significance to the district, or (c) located in an historic district designated under a State or local statute containing criteria satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior. A "certified rehabilitation" is defined to be any rehabilitaton of a certified historic structure which the Secretary of the Interior has certified as being consistent with the historic character of such property or district. The required use of straight line depreciation applies to additions to the capital account after December 31, 1975, and before June 15, 1981.

Under present law, the expenses of demolishing an old building, and the remaining undepreciated basis of the demolished building, are deductible unless the building was acquired with a view toward its demolition. The Senate amendment provides that in case of the demolition of a certified historic structure, or of any other structure in a Registered Historic District unless certified by the Secretary of the Interior prior to its demolition not to be of historic significance to the district, no deduction is to be allowed for (1) the amount expended for its demolition, or (2) any loss sustained on account of the demolition. Deductions disallowed under this provision are to be treated as chargeable to the capital account with respect to the land on which the demolished structure was located and thus are not to be includable in the depreciable basis of any replacement structure. The disallowance of deductions applies to demolitions commencing after June 30, 1976, and before January 1, 1981.

Under present law, accelerated depreciation methods are generally not allowable with respect to used property acquired after July 24, 1969. A 125% declining-balance method may be employed to depreciate used residential property with a useful life of 20 years or more at the time of acquisition. The costs of rehabilitating an existing structure must be capitalized and depreciated according to the method (straightline or 125% declining balance) used to depreciate the structure. Under the Senate amendment, taxpayers are to be allowed an election to treat for depreciation purposes "substantially rehabilitated historic property" as if they were the original users of the property (i.e., they would be allowed to use the 150% (or 200% in the case of residential rental property) declining-balance method of depreciation with respect to the entire basis of the rehabilitated property). A "substantially rehabilitated historic property" is defined to be any certified historic property if the capital expenditures incurred in the certified rehabilitation of the property during the 24-month period ending on the last day of the taxable year exceed the greater of (1) the taxpayer's adjusted basis in the structure on the first day of the 24-month period or (2) $5,000. Accelerated depreciation on substantially rehabilitated historic property applies to additions to the capital account after June 30, 1976, and before July 1, 1981.

The Senate amendment also allows taxpayers an election, in lieu of claiming the depreciation deductions otherwise allowable, to amortize over a 60-month period the capital expenditures incurred in a certified rehabilitation of an historic structure. Amortization in excess of depreciation otherwise allowable is to be recaptured as ordinary income on a sale of the property. Five-year amortization applies to additions to capital account after June 14, 1976, and before June 15, 1981.

A charitable deduction is not allowed under present law for contributions to charity (not in trust) of less than the taxpayers' entire interest in the property unless it is a contribution of an undivided interest in the property, a contribution which would have been entitled to a charitable deduction if it had been made in trust, or a contribution of a remainder interest in real property consisting of personal residences or farms. Under the Senate amendment a deduction is allowed for the contribution to a charitable organization exclusively for "conservation purposes" of (1) a lease on, option to purchase, or easement with respect to real property of not less than 30 years' duration or (2) a remainder interest in real property. The term "conservation purposes" is defined to mean the preservation of land areas for public recreation, education, or scenic enjoyment, the preservation of historically important land areas or structures, or the preservation of natural environmental systems. Such contributions also qualify as charitable contributions for estate and gift tax purposes. The deductions are allowable for charitable contributions and transfers made after June 13, 1976, and before June 14, 1977.

1326. Supplemental Security Income for Victims of Certain Natural Disasters

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—In general, an SSI recipient living in someone else's household has his benefits reduced by one-third to reflect a lower level of need. P.L. 94–331 eliminated for up to six months the one-third reduction in the case of individuals displaced as a result of a major disaster occurring between June 1, 1976 and December 31, 1976. The Senate amendment extends the period during which the one-third reduction may be suspended from six months to 18 months.

1327. Exclusion of Countries Which Aid and Abet International Terrorists From Preferential Tariff Treatment

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under Title V of the Trade Act of 1974, eligible articles imported into the United States from beneficiary developing countries are duty free. Under section 502 of the Trade Act certain countries are prohibited from being designated as beneficiary developing countries. The prohibitions apply to (1) Communist countries, generally speaking; (2) members of OPEC; (3) countries which have expropriated U.S. property without prompt, adequate, and effective compensation; (4) countries which do not cooperate with the United States to prevent narcotics from unlawfullly entering the United States; (5) countries which do not eliminate reverse preferences; and (6) countries which do not recognize arbitral awards to U.S. citizens. Prohibitions (4), (5) and (6) may be waived by the President if he determines that such a waiver will be in the national economic interest of the United States.

Under the Senate amendment, a new prohibition is added to the definition of beneficiary developing country which provides that a country may not be designated if it aids or abets, by granting sanctuary from prosecution to, any individual or group which has committed an act of international terrorism. This prohibition may be waived by the President if he determines that the waiver will be in the national economic interest of the United States.

1328. Net Operating Loss Carryovers for Cuban Expropriation Losses

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a taxpayer may carry over a net operating loss attributable to Cuban expropriation to each of 15 taxable years following the taxable year of the loss. The Senate amendment extends the carryover period for five years to 20 taxable years following the loss (all losses were claimed prior to December 31, 1965).

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees state that this is to be the final extension of the provision.

SECTIONS OMITTED FROM SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 26

Study of Tax Treatment of Married and Single Persons

House bills.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under the Senate amendment, the Joint Committee Staff is to study the tax treatment of married and single persons, as well as heads of households, to suggest changes toward improving equity in treatment. The study is to be completed by September 30, 1977.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision because the Joint Committee staff is studying this subject for the Ways and Means Task Force and will deliver its report to the Senate Finance Committee as well.

Prohibition of State-Local Taxation of Certain Vessels, Barges, or Other Craft

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, Congress has not limited the power of States or of their political subdivisions to tax vessels using navigable waterways in interstate commerce. The Senate amendment prohibits any State or political subdivision of a State from taxing any vessel, barge, or other craft using navigable waters of the United States in interstate commerce. This prohibition, however, is not to be effective as to barges, vessels, or other craft incorporated under the laws of the taxing State; owned by individuals, partnerships, or corporations domiciled in, or residents of, the State; or having their home port in the State. The prohibition is also not to apply if the entire use of the craft takes place in a single State. This provision applies to taxable years ending after June 30, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision. Instead, conferees request that the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations study this area and report to the Congress its findings and recommendations.

CAPITAL GAINS

1401. Capital Loss Offset Against Ordinary Income

House bill.—Under present law, capital losses are deductible in full against capital gains. For individuals, the excess of capital losses over capital gains can be deducted against up to $1,000 of ordinary income each year, with an unlimited carryover to future years.

The House bill increases the amount of ordinary income against which capital losses may be deducted to $2,000 in 1976, to $3,000 in 1977, and $4,000 in 1978 and subsequent years.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment deletes the House provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement raises the amount of ordinary income against which capital losses may be offset to $2,000 in 1977, and to $3,000 in 1978 and subsequent years.

1402. Holding Period for Long-Term Capital Gains

House bill.—Under present law, gains or losses on capital assets held for more than six months are considered long-term capital gains or losses. For individuals, 50 percent of the excess of net long-term capital gains over net short-term capital losses is deductible from income. Individuals may elect to have their first $50,000 of net long-term capital gains taxed at an alternative rate of 25 percent. Corporations have the option of paying an alternative tax of 30 percent on net long-term capital gains.

The House bill increases the holding period for long-term capital gains from six months to eight months for 1976, to 10 months for 1977, and to one year for 1978 and subsequent years, except for gains on agricultural commodity futures contracts.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment deletes the House provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement lengthens the holding period defining long-term capital gains to 9 months in 1977 and one year in 1978 and subsequent years. Agricultural commodity futures contracts will retain the 6-month holding period in accordance with the House bill. In addition the requirement of present law that certain timber be treated as sold on the first day of the calendar year in which that timber is cut is deleted.

1403. Capital Loss Carryover for Mutual Funds

House bill.—The House bill extends the capital loss carryover period for mutual funds from 5 years to 8 years.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is identical to the House bill.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement is the same as the House bill and the Senate amendment.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 28

PENSION AND INSURANCE TAXATION

1501. Individual Retirement Account (IRA) for Spouse

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the IRA deduction is limited to $1,500 or 15 percent of compensation (whichever is less), so that a person without earned income is not allowed an IRA deduction. The IRA deduction is not allowed to a person for a contribution to the IRA of another person.

Under the Senate amendment, an individual with compensation (and who is eligible to deduct IRA contributions) can contribute up to $2,000 to an IRA that he and his nonemployed spouse own jointly, or he can contribute up to $1,000 to his own IRA and $1,000 to an IRA separately owned by his spouse. The deduction is limited to 15 percent of compensation. Both spouses must consent to a distribution from a joint IRA. The $2,000 and the $1,000 IRAs would be alternatives to the $1,500 IRA allowed under present law. Contributions to the $2,000 and $1,000 IRAs would be offset by employer contributions under the rules for limited employee retirement accounts (under sec. 1502 of the House bill). The amendment would apply to taxable years beginning after 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that a $1,750 limit ($875 for each spouse) was agreed to in lieu of the $2,000 limit. Also, the conference agreement provides that the deduction is allowed for contributions to separate IRAs for each spouse or to an IRA which has one subaccount for the husband and another for the wife. (The single account with two subaccounts could be considered a common investment fund.) Under the agreement, although the spouses own separate subaccounts, each could have a right of survivorship with respect to the subaccount of the other. The conference agreement does not permit a deduction for a contribution to an IRA which the husband and wife own jointly; but where a single IRA with subaccounts is used, each spouse could have a right of survivorship with respect to the subaccount of the other. Under the conference agreement, an IRA deduction is allowed under the new rules or the present rules (but not both).

1502. Limitation on Contributions to Certain H.R. 10 Plans

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a self-employed individual can set aside up to $750 of self-employment income in an H.R. 10 plan without regard to the usual rule limiting H.R. 10 plan contributions to 15 percent of self-employment income. However, due to a technical problem, a plan is disqualified if the contribution exceeds 25 percent of the individual's self-employment income.

The Senate amendment allows a self-employed individual to set aside up to $750 of self-employment income in an H.R. 10 plan without regard to the usual 15-percent limitation or the 25-percent limitation. The exception would only apply if the individual's adjusted gross income does not exceed $15,000. The amendment applies to years beginning after 1975.

1503. Retirement Deductions for Members of Armed Forces Reserves and National Guard

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law provides that a participant in a governmental plan is not allowed a deduction for an IRA contribution so that the deduction is not allowed to members of the Armed Forces Reserves and National Guard covered by the military retirement plan. The Senate amendment allows a member of the Armed Forces Reserves or National Guard to qualify for an IRA deduction for a year (if otherwise qualified) despite his participation in the military retirement plan if he has 90 or fewer days of active duty (other than for training) during the year. The Senate amendment applies to taxable years beginning after 1975.

1504. Tax-Exempt Annuity Contracts in Closed-End Mutual Funds

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, amounts contributed by certain tax-exempt organizations and educational institutions to provide annuities for employees are not included in the income of the employees if the contributions are used to purchase annuity contracts or are invested in open-end mutual funds. (An open-end mutual fund is a regulated investment company which issues redeemable shares.) The Senate amendment allows contributions for tax-sheltered annuities to be made to closed-end investment companies as well as to open-end mutual funds and annuity contracts. (A closed-end investment company is a regulated investment company which issues non-redeemable shares.) The amendment applies to taxable years beginning after 1975.

1505. Pension Fund Investments in Segregated Asset Accounts of Life Insurance Companies

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a segregated asset account can serve as an investment account and reserve for an insurance contract providing for annuities under which the premiums or benefits depend on the performance of the assets in the account. The Senate amendment clarifies present law by allowing a qualified pension plan to invest in an insurance contract with a segregated asset account even though the contract does not provide annuities. A pension fund can invest assets in such an account in lieu of a trust if the investment is otherwise permitted under law. The amendment applies for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, and clarifies the treatment of pension fund investments in nonsegregated accounts.

1506. Study of Salary Reduction Pension Plans

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—On December 6, 1972, the IRS issued proposed regulations which would have changed the tax treatment of salary reduction, cafeteria, and cash or deferred profit-sharing plans. In order to allow time for congressional study of these areas, section 2006 of ERISA provided for a temporary freeze of the status quo until December 31, 1976. Under the Senate amendment the temporary freeze of the status quo (under which plans established before June 27, 1974, are governed by the law in effect prior to the 1972 proposed regulations) would be extended until January 1, 1978.

1507. Consolidated Returns for Life and Mutual Insurance Companies

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, life insurance companies cannot file consolidated returns with non-life companies. In addition, mutual casualty insurers are effectively precluded from filing consolidated returns with other types of companies. The Senate amendment allows life insurance companies and other mutual insurance companies to file consolidated returns with other companies under rules limiting the amount of non-life losses applied against life company income to one-half the loss or one-half of life company income, whichever is less. Non-life losses could not be carried back against life company income. Consolidated filing is allowed for taxable years beginning after 1977.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but with substantial modifications. First, it postpones for five years, or until 1981, any consolidation of life insurance company returns with non-life insurance company returns. Second, in 1981 and subsequent years consolidated returns may be filed by a life company and another company only where they have been affiliated for the preceding 5 years. Third, the amount of any non-life company loss which may be so applied against life company income in 1981 and the proportion of the life insurance company income which may be so offset in 1981 is limited to 25 percent. Fourth, in 1982 the percentage referred to above is to be 30 percent, and thereafter the percentage is to be 35 percent.

1508. Guaranteed Renewable Life Insurance Contracts

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a life insurance company can deduct 10 percent of the increase in its reserves for nonparticipating contracts for a taxable year or, if greater, 3 percent of the premiums for the year (excluding the portion of the premiums which is allocable to annuity features) attributable to nonparticipating contracts (other than group contracts) if the policies are issued or renewed for at least 5 years. The Senate amendment provides that the time for which a policy is issued or renewed includes the period for which the insurer guarantees that the policy is renewable by the policyholder. The amendment applies to taxable years beginning after 1957.

1509. Study of Expanded Participation in Individual Retirement Accounts

House bill.—Under present law, an individual who is an active participant in a qualified pension, etc., plan, a tax-sheltered annuity, or a governmental plan cannot make deductible contributions to an IRA. The House bill allows an IRA deduction to a participant in a qualified plan or tax-sheltered annuity. The deduction is allowed for a contribution to the plan (if the plan was in existence when the 1974 Pension Act was enacted) or to an IRA. The deduction is not allowed to a participant in a governmental plan. The usual IRA limits are reduced by forfeitures and amounts actually contributed to a defined contribution plan by an employer. Under a defined benefit plan, the limitation is reduced by the level cost of the plan benefits or the cost of benefits accruing during the year. Employers would report these amounts to employees. In addition, the bill provides that the special penalty tax imposed on excess contributions to an IRA does not apply if the contribution does not exceed $1,500 and the excess contributions are withdrawn before the tax return for the year is due.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment adopts provisions under which a participant in a governmental plan would be permitted to make deductible contributions to an IRA (but only if a provision like that in the House bill becomes effective for a participant in a private qualified plan). If the government employee-type IRA becomes effective, the IRA limits on deductions would continue to apply, but they would be reduced by the amount of the employer contributions under the regular pension plan allocable to the employee.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits both the House provision and the Senate amendment. However, the conference agreement provides that the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation is to study the LERA concept and report its findings to the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate.

TAX-FREE ROLLOVER IN EVENT OF PLAN TERMINATION

House bill.—The bill permits tax-free rollover of a distribution from a tax-qualified plan to an individual retirement account (IRA) or to another qualified plan in the event of plan termination. (Provisions substantially similar to the House bill were enacted on April 15, 1976 (Public Law 94-267).)

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits the provision (because of the enactment of Public Law 94-267).

REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS

1601. Deficiency Divided Procedure

House bill.—Under present law, a REIT is provided the same general conduit treatment that applies to a mutual fund. If a trust qualifies as a REIT, income of the REIT which is distributed to investors is taxed to them and not to the REIT. A REIT must distribute at least 90 percent of its REIT taxable income in the year earned or next succeeding year. Failure to meet the distribution requirement results in loss of REIT status.

The House bill provides for a deficiency dividend procedure which permits qualifying distributions to be made in subsequent years where an adjustment occurs that either increases the amount which the REIT is required to distribute to meet the 90-percent test or decreases the amount of dividends previously distributed for that year. This deficiency dividend procedure is available only if the entire amount of the adjustment was due to reasonable cause. A penalty is imposed where the deficiency dividend procedure is adopted based on the total amount of the adjustment.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that it (1) modifies the House bill to make the procedure available only where the entire amount of the adjustment was not due to fraud with intent to evade tax or willful failure to file an income tax return and (2) modifies the House bill to base the penalty on the amount of the adjustment to the extent that the deficiency dividend deduction is allowed.

1602. Failure To Meet Income Source Tests

House bill.—Under present law, a REIT is required to derive annually at least 90 percent of its gross income from certain passive sources and at least 75 percent of its gross income from certain real estate sources. Failure to meet these requirements results in disqualification. Under the House bill, failure to meet the 75-percent or 90-percent requirements as a result of a determination will not result in disqualification if the REIT had reasonable grounds to believe and did believe that it met the 75-percent and 90-percent tests. In addition, the House bill imposes a tax at normal corporate rates (48 percent) on the net income attributable to the amount by which the REIT fails the 75-percent or 90-percent requirements.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment modifies the House bill to provide that failure to meet the 75-percent or 90-percent requirements will not result in disqualification if (1) the REIT sets forth the source and nature of its gross income in its return, (2) the inclusion of any incorrect information in this schedule is not due to fraud with intent to evade tax, and (3) the failure to meet the income source requirements is due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect. In addition, the Senate amendment imposes a 100-percent tax on the net income attributable to the greater of the amount by which the REIT fails the 75-percent or 90-percent requirements.

1603. Treatment of Property Held for Sale to Customers

House bill.—Under present law, a REIT is not permitted to hold any property (other than foreclosure property) primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of its trade or business. Failure to meet the requirement results in disqualification. The House bill permits a REIT to derive one-percent of its gross income from property (other than foreclosure property) held for sale to customers without disqualification. In addition, the House bill imposes a tax at normal corporate rates (48 percent) on the net income from such property, up to one-percent of its gross income, and at twice the normal corporate rates (96 percent) on the net income from such property in excess of one-percent of its gross income.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment removes entirely the prohibition against holding property for sale to customers. Instead, it imposes a 100-percent tax on the net income from such property.

1604(a). Increase in 90-Percent Gross Income Requirement to 95 Percent

House bill.—Under present law, in order to qualify for real estate investment trust status, the trust must derive at least 90 percent of its income from certain passive sources. The House bill increases the percentage of gross income that must be derived from certain passive sources from 90-percent to 95-percent.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment follows the House bill, except that the increase applies to taxable years beginning after 1979.

1604(b). Change in Definition of "Rents From Real Property"

House bill.—Under present law, "rents from real property" qualify for both the 75-percent and 90-percent requirements. "Rents from real property" does not include (1) amounts received for customary services if separate charges are made for such services, (2) amounts attributable to the rental of personal property even if incidental to the rental of real property, and (3) amounts which are contingent upon the net income or profits of anybody deriving income from property.

The House bill modifies the definition of "rents from real property" to include (1) amounts received for customary services even if separate charges are made for such services and (2) amounts attributable to personal property incidental to the rental of real property if the amount allocable to personal property is less than 15 percent of total rent.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment follows the House bill. In addition, the Senate amendment provides that where a REIT leases to a prime tenant with a rent based on a percentage of the prime tenant's gross receipts and the prime tenant subleases to a subtenant with a rent based on a percentage of the subtenant's net income or profits, only a portion of the rent received from the prime tenant does not qualify as "rents from real property."

1604(c). Change in Distribution Requirements

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, in order to qualify for REIT status, a trust must distribute 90-percent of its REIT taxable income. If a trust qualifies for REIT status, the nonqualifying income is not subject to tax at the REIT level if such income is distributed to its shareholders.

The Senate amendment deletes the tax on nonqualifying income. Instead, the Senate amendment increases the distribution requirement from 90 percent to 95 percent for taxable years beginning after 1979.

1604(d). Termination or Revocation of Election

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a REIT which loses its status as a REIT in one year can requalify in the next subsequent year even if the REIT purposefully did not qualify in the preceding year. The Senate amendment provides that a REIT which voluntarily disqualifies itself from REIT status cannot requalify for 5 years.

1605. Excise Tax on Distributions Made After Taxable Year

House bill.—Under present law, a REIT can elect to treat dividends paid during one year as qualifying distributions for the next preceding year even though the REIT's shareholders are not taxed until the distribution is received. The House bill imposes an excise tax on a REIT to the extent that it fails to distribute 75-percent of the income it is required to distribute during the year the income is earned.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment follows the House bill, except that it delays the application of the excise tax to taxable years beginning after 1979.

1606. Allowance of Net Operating Loss Carryover

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a REIT is not allowed to use a net operating loss carryover to reduce its taxable income and distribution requirements. The Senate amendment allows the net operating loss deduction to a REIT for carryovers but not carrybacks.

1607. Alternative Tax in Case of Capital Gains

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a REIT is taxed on its net capital gains less amounts of net capital gain distributed to shareholders at a flat 30-percent rate. It cannot reduce its net capital gains by ordinary losses as is permitted ordinary corporations. The Senate amendment permits a REIT to reduce its net capital gains by its ordinary losses if it does not use the alternative tax (30 percent) on net capital gain.

RAILROAD PROVISIONS

1701(a). Railroad Ties

House bill.—Under present law, railroads generally use retirement-replacement depreciation for track costs under which original track costs are capitalized and later replacements are entirely or partly deducted currently.

The House bill allows a current deduction for costs of replacing one type of railroad tie with another type of tie. The provision applies to amounts paid or incurred after December 31, 1974.

Senate amendments.—A committee amendment allows a deduction of costs for an improved type of tie to the extent of the current costs for the type of tie which is replaced, effective for amounts paid or incurred after December 31, 1975. Under a floor amendment, the full cost of replacement ties could be deducted currently.

1701(b). Investment Credit Limitation for Railroads

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law provides that investment credits which may be used are generally limited to 50 percent of tax liability for the taxable year. Public utilities, however, are allowed to use their credits up to 100 percent of tax liability for taxable years ending in 1975 and 1976, and in percentages which are reduced annually by 10 percentage points for later years until 1981, when the limitation returns to 50 percent.

The Senate amendment allows railroads to take credits up to 100 percent of tax liability for 1976 and 1977 with annual reductions of 10 percentage points thereafter until the limitation returns to 50 percent in 1982. The amendment applies to tax years ending after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement adopts the Senate amendment but moves the effective date forward one year so that it will begin to apply in taxable years ending after December 31, 1976, and the limitation will return to 50 percent in 1983. In addition, the conferees specified that only a railroad, and not a lessor of railroad property, is entitled to this temporary increase in the investment credit limitation.

1702. Amortization of Railroad Grading and Tunnel Bores

House bill.—Domestic railroad common carriers may presently amortize railroad grading and tunnel bores placed in service after 1968 on a straight-line basis over a 50-year period. The House bill extends this same treatment on an elective basis to railroad grading and tunnel bores placed in service before January 1, 1969.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

1703. Investment Credit Limitation for Airlines

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law provides that investment credits which may be used are generally limited to 50 percent of tax liability for the tax year. Public utilities, however, are allowed to use their credits up to 100 percent of tax liability for taxable years ending in 1975 and 1976, and in percentages which are reduced annually by 10 percentage points for later years until 1981, when the limitation returns to 50 percent. The Senate amendment allows airlines to take credits up to 100 percent of tax liability for 1976 and 1977 with annual reductions of 10 percentage points thereafter until the limitation returns to 50 percent in 1982. The amendment applies to taxable years ending after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement adopts the Senate amendment but moves the effective date forward one year so that it will begin to apply in taxable years ending after December 31, 1976, and the limitation will return to 50 percent in 1983. The conferees also decided to include all common carrier airlines as eligible for this temporary increase in the limitation and it was specified that only an airline, and not a lessor of airline property, is entitled to the increased limitation.

Amortization of Track Accounts

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, railroads generally use retirement-replacement depreciation for track costs under which original track costs are capitalized and later replacements are entirely or partly deducted currently.

The Senate amendment allows domestic railroads 10-year amortization on capitalized costs for railroad track materials and installation. A deduction under this provision is to be deferred to the extent it causes a taxpayer to have a loss from its railroad operations. The Senate amendment applies to costs of track materials placed in service after December 31, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 31 (OMITTED)

TAX CREDIT FOR GARDEN TOOLS

House bill.—The House bill provides a new 7-percent tax credit for the first $100 of home garden tool purchases. It is effective for expenses paid in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision.

REPEAL AND REVISION OF OBSOLETE, ETC., PROVISIONS OF CODE

1900–1907; 1951–52. DEADWOOD PROVISIONS

House bill.—The House bill repeals or modifies obsolete and rarely used provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. It also makes simplifying changes in Code terminology.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment generally is the same as the House bill, with certain conforming changes. However, the Senate amendment modifies the House bill's definition of the term "or his delegate" as it is used in the Code in references to powers exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the "Deadwood" provisions as modified by the Senate amendment. However, the conference agreed to the House bill's definition of the term "or his delegate", with the understanding that the definition is not to have any impact with respect to existing delegations of authority.

ENERGY-RELATED PROVISIONS

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment includes a series of energy-related provisions. It includes a (1) residential insulation credit, (2) residential solar and geothermal energy equipment credit, (3) residential heat pump credit, (4) credit for wind-related residential energy equipment, (5) business insulation credit, (6) business solar and geothermal equipment credit, (7) investment credit for wind-related energy equipment used in the production of electricity, (8) 12-percent investment credit for certain energy conversion and production equipment (including equipment for waste conversion, organic fuel conversion, railroads, deep coal mining and shale oil conversion), (9) deduction for geothermal energy development costs, (10) denial of investment credit for portable air conditioners and heaters, (11) study of recycling incentives, (12) repeal of excise tax on buses and bus parts, (13) revision of excise tax treatment of rerefined lubricating oil, (14) exemption from excise tax on special motor fuels in certain nonhighway use, and (15) duty-free exchange of crude oil.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits the provisions in the Senate amendment, as the Finance Committee has reported the Senate amendment in a separate House-passed bill (H.R. 6860).

TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

2101. Modification of Foundation Self-Dealing Rules in 1969 Act Relating to Leased Property

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.— Under present law, self-dealing rules generally prevent sales, exchanges, or leases of property between private foundations and disqualified persons. There are transitional rules for certain sales of excess business holdings by foundations and continuation of certain leases. There is no transition rule which permits a sale of leased property by a foundation to a disqualified person. The Senate amendment permits a foundation to sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of certain property to a disqualified person where the property is now being leased to the disqualified person (pursuant to a binding contract which was in effect on October 9, 1969) if the foundation receives no less than fair market value for the property. This provision applies to disposition made after the date of enactment and before January 1, 1978.

2102. Private Foundation Set-Asides

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, an amount "set aside" by a foundation for a special project may be treated as a qualifying distribution for the payout requirements only if approved in advance by the IRS. The foundation must establish that set-asides will be paid out for a specific project within 5 years and that the project can better be accomplished by a set-aside than by immediate payment. As an alternative to present set-aside rules, the Senate amendment permits set-asides without advance IRS approval under temporary, relaxed rules which require principally that—

(1) the set-aside be for a project which will not be completed before the end of the year;

(2) the foundation distributes in each year after 1975 (or if later, after the end of the fourth taxable year following its creation) not less than the required payout; and

(3) during the 4 years prior to the first taxable year beginning after 1975 (or if later, after the end of the fourth taxable year following its creation) the foundation has distributed an aggregate amount not less than the sum of a percentage of the regular, required payout increasing by 20% annually. The amendment applies to taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, and also adds a technical amendment to hold the statute of limitations on assessments and collections open during the extended payout period.

2103. Mandatory Payout Rate for Private Foundations

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a private foundation must distribute for charitable purposes the greater of (1) all its adjusted net income or (2) an annually determined variable percentage of its noncharitable assets. The percentage is set at 6.75 percent for taxable years beginning in 1976. The Senate amendment reduces the mandatory payout requirement to 5 percent and provides that this percentage is to be permanent. The amendment applies to taxable years beginning after 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment and also establishes certain explicit rules for valuing a private foundation's noncharitable assets in determining the required charitable expenditures (minimum investment return). In determining the value of securities for minimum charitable expenditures purposes, their fair market value (determined without regard to any reduction in value) shall not be reduced unless, and only to the extent that, the private foundation establishes that as a result of (1) the size of the bloc of such securities, (2) the fact that the securities are securities in a closely held corporation, or (3) the fact that the sale of such securities would result in a forced or distress sale, the securities could not be liquidated within a reasonable period of time except at a price less than fair market value. Any reduction in value for any of the three reasons shall not in the aggregate exceed 10 percent of the fair market value of the securities.

2104. Extension of Time To Amend Charitable Remainder Trust Governing Instruments

House bill.—Under the Tax Reform Act of 1969, in order for an estate tax charitable deduction to be allowable for the bequest of a remainder interest to charity, the remainder interest must be in the form of a charitable remainder annuity trust, a charitable remainder unitrust, or a pooled income fund. Present law also contains special transitional rules which permit post-death modifications of wills and trusts created before September 21, 1974, which contain bequests of remainder interests to charity, to conform to the new requirements of the Tax Reform Act of 1969, if the modifications were made before December 31, 1975. The House bill did not contain a provision on this issue. However, the House has already passed a two-year extension of these transitional rules in H.R. 9889 to permit modifications until December 31, 1977.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment extends the time for modification of wills and trusts which contain bequests of remainder interests to charity to qualify for an estate tax charitable deduction until December 31, 1977, and also allows wills and trusts created after September 21, 1974, and before December 31, 1977, to qualify for the extension.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees state that this is to be the last extension of these transitional rules.

2105. Unrelated Trade or Business Income of Trade Shows, State Fairs, etc.

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, tax-exempt organizations are taxed on their "unrelated business taxable income". "Unrelated business taxable income" has been interpreted to include certain income from fairs and expositions sponsored by tax-exempt organizations and rental income from display space leased at a convention or trade show if the exhibitor is permitted to sell his wares at the convention or trade show. The Senate amendment exempts from the unrelated business income tax the income from fairs and expositions of an exempt charitable, social welfare, or agricultural organization, which operates a public entertainment activity that meets certain conditions. In order to qualify for the exemption, the organization must also regularly conduct, as one of its substantial exempt purposes, a fair or exposition which is both agricultural and educational. Where the exemption applies, the conducting of qualified public entertainment activities will not affect the tax-exempt status of the sponsoring organization.

In addition, the Senate amendment exempts from the unrelated business income tax the income from conventions and trade shows of certain exempt organizations (generally, unions and trade associations) which regularly conduct as one of their exempt purposes conventions or trade show activity which stimulates interest in, and demand for, an industry's products in general. There are also a series of conditions which must be met by a qualifying convention and trade show activity. Where the exemption applies, the conducting of qualified convention or trade show activities will not affect the tax-exempt status of the sponsoring organization.

The amendment applies to income from fairs and expositions in taxable years after 1962 and to income from conventions and trade shows in taxable years beginning after 1969.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that it deletes the portion of the amendment which provides that the tax-exempt status of a union or trade association will not be affected by its conducting of qualified convention or trade show activities. The deletion of this provision insures that the union or trade association must have substantial exempt activities other than its conducting a convention or trade show. In addition, the conference agreement modifies the effective date of the Senate amendment to make the exemption for conventions and trade shows applicable to taxable years beginning after the date of enactment. However, no change is made in the effective date of the provisions of the Senate Amendment concerning fairs and expositions.

2106. Declaratory Judgments Regarding Tax-Exempt Status of Charitable, etc., Organizations

House bill.—Under present law, the Tax Court can hear declaratory judgment suits only on the tax status of employee retirement plans. In no other case may an individual or an organization seek a declaratory judgment as to an organization's tax-exempt status. Under the House bill, the Federal district courts and the United States Tax Court are granted jurisdiction in a suit brought by an organization in an actual controversy in a case involving an IRS determination (or failure to make a determination) with respect to the organization's status as tax exempt, as a qualified charitable contribution donee, as a private foundation, or as a private operating foundation. This provision applies to pleadings filed more than 1 year after the date of enactment but only with respect to IRS determinations (or requests for determinations) made after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that jurisdiction is granted only to the Federal district court for the District of Columbia, the U.S. Court of Claims, and the U.S. Tax Court, and the amendment applies to pleadings filed more than 6 months after the date of enactment but only with respect to IRS determinations (or requests for determinations) made after January 1, 1976.

SECTIONS OMITTED FROM SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 34

Reduction of Private Foundation Excise Tax on Investment Income

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a 4-percent tax is imposed on the net investment income of private foundations. The Senate amendment reduces the rate of tax from 4 percent to 2 percent, effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision.

Alcoholism Trust Fund

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, excise taxes are imposed on alcohol, wine and beer, but there is no provision for any trust fund.

The Senate amendment establishes a trust fund to pay 50 percent of the cost of occupational alcoholism programs for employed persons by HEW through the National Institute for Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. Any organization applying may receive at most matching funds for new programs. Up to 10 percent of the fund is allowed for administration, and the remaining funds may be used for treatment and prevention of underserved populations. The funds are to be provided by appropriation acts, as no specific revenues are earmarked.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision.

Exclusion of Certain Companion Sitting Placement Services from Employment Tax Requirements

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, certain tax payment and reporting requirements are placed upon employers in regard to F.I.C.A. (social security) and F.U.T.A. (unemployment) taxes and withholding at the source on wages. The Senate amendment excepts companion sitter placement services from the definition of "employer" for purposes of Federal employment taxes if the service does not pay or receive the salary or wages of the sitters and is compensated by the sitters or the persons who employ them on a fee basis. The provision applies to taxable years beginning after 1975.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision. The conferees note that the Joint Committee staff is studying for the Senate Finance Committee the overall definitions of "independent contractor" and "employee" for Federal tax purposes. This subject will be included in the study. The conferees urge that the Service withdraw its Revenue Ruling 74–414 on babysitting placement services.

Minimum Distribution Requirements to Include Miscellaneous Distributions

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, qualifying distributions of private foundations include only amounts expended in furtherance of charitable purposes. A private foundation must exercise expenditure responsibility with respect to grants or contributions to organizations other than public charities. Expenditure responsibility requires a foundation to exert all reasonable efforts and to establish adequate procedures to see that these grants are properly used, to obtain reports on these grants, and to make reports to the Internal Revenue Service. Also, if an amount is spent for a purpose other than a charitable purpose, it will be a taxable expenditure.

The Senate amendment provides that qualifying distributions include contributions to an unincorporated association or other organization by a private foundation for charitable, civic, or community activities to the extent such contributions do not exceed $200 per donee organization and the amount contributed is not to defray the expense of an activity which is illegal or in violation to public policy. The Senate amendment also provides that in determining whether expenditure responsibility has been exercised, the size of the grant is to be taken into account. These provisions apply to taxable years beginning after date of enactment with respect to contributions made after such date.

ESTATE AND GIFT TAX PROVISIONS

House bill.—No provision.

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment included a series of modifications in the estate and gift tax provisions.

Conference agreement.—This amendment was reported in technical disagreement. (See the appendix.)

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 36

Other amendments

2301. Outdoor Advertising Displays

House bill.—The House bill contains no provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law provides that if real property is involuntarily converted as the result of a condemnation, and the taxpayer uses the proceeds to obtain "like kind" replacement property, gain on the conversion is not recognized. There is conflicting authority as to whether billboards and other outdoor advertising displays qualify as real property for purposes of this nonrecognition rule. Under the Senate amendment, an irrevocable election is provided for taxpayers to treat qualifying outdoor advertising displays as real property. In addition, replacement real property will be considered as "like kind" even though the replacement property is a different type of real property interest than the taxpayer held in an outdoor advertising display which was involuntarily converted. The amendment is effective for taxable years beginning after 1970.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. In addition, the conferees specified that the availability of this election to treat outdoor advertising displays as real property should not be interpreted to prevent owners of such displays from treating them as personal property.

2302. Excise Tax Treatment of Large Cigars

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Present law provides a bracket system of excise taxes on certain cigars, under which the rate varies depending on the amount of the intended retail price of the cigar. The maximum tax is $20 per thousand on cigars retailing for 20 cents or more each. The Senate amendment changes the bracket system to an ad valorem tax of 8½ percent of the wholesale price (retaining the $20 per thousand maximum). The change is to be effective on the first month which begins more than 90 days after the date of enactment.

2303. Gain From Sales or Exchanges Between Related Parties

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, gain from a sale or exchange of depreciable property is denied capital gain treatment if the sale is between a husband and wife, or between an individual and a corporation if over 80 percent of the value of the corporation's stock is owned by the individual, his spouse, and his minor children or grandchildren. The courts have held that this provision does not apply to gain from the sale of depreciable property between 2 corporations controlled by the same individual (or his family).

The Senate amendment strengthens present law in two principal ways: (1) the amendment broadens the scope of this provision to cover a sale or exchange of depreciable property between commonly controlled corporations; and (2) the amendment broadens the constructive ownership rules which trigger the restrictions under this provision to include the taxpayer's parents, his adult children, and any trust, estate or partnership of which the taxpayer is a beneficiary or partner. In addition, the Senate amendment makes this provision apply where an individual owns 80 percent or more (rather than only over 80 percent) of a corporation. These rules apply to sales or exchanges after the date of enactment, except sales or exchanges made pursuant to a binding contract entered into before the date of enactment.

2304. Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarships

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under IRS rulings, amounts received under the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program (and similar programs) are taxable as compensation for future employment (because a special 3-year legislative exemption ended December 31, 1975). The Senate amendment excludes from income in 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1979 amounts received under the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program (and similar programs) by a member of a uniformed services participating in the programs in 1976.

2305. Exchange Funds

House bill.—Under present law, a group of investors may not pool appreciated stocks or other property in a new corporation without payment of capital gains tax on the appreciation. This rule was added in 1966. Present law is silent on the possibility of using a partnership or a trust as the vehicle to pool and diversify investments tax-free. On April 28, 1975, the Internal Revenue Service issued a private ruling holding that an exchange fund can be formed tax-free (under present law) as a publicly syndicated limited partnership.

The House bill contains no provision dealing with this subject. However, on May 2, 1976, the Hounse passed H.R. 11920, which:

(1) Amends the partnership rules to make taxable the contribution of property to an exchange fund formed as a partnership (general or limited);

(2) Makes taxable a merger or other reorganization involving an undiversified investment company (such as a merger of a personal holding company owning a limited group of stocks with a widely-diversified mutual fund); and

(3) Makes taxable any future transactions where similar diversification of investments is sought through a trust or a common trust fund.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is generally the same as the provisions of H.R. 11920, except for—

(1) an exception for family partnerships; and

(2) a later effective date for partnership exchange funds.

Under the family partnership exception, a family group may share income from a pool of stocks if—

(1) the partnership is a general partnership,

(2) over 95 percent of the partnership is owned by the same family, and

(3) gain on a sale of stock is taxable to the partner who originally contributed the property to the partnership.

The amendment has the same effective dates as H.R. 11920, except that in the case of partnerships, certain transfers after February 17, 1976, are excepted if before March 27, 1976, the partnership either filed a request for a private letter ruling from the Service or filed a registration statement with the SEC.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (including the effective date provisions thereof), except that the family partnership exception is deleted.

2306. Distributions by Subchapter S Corporations

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the shareholders of a subchapter S corporation are taxed each year on the income of the corporation regardless of whether the income is distributed to the shareholders. The undistributed taxable income may be subsequently distributed tax-free to the shareholders. However, an earnings and profits rule (concerning accelerated depreciation) generally applicable to corporations may cause a distribution to be a taxable dividend rather than a distribution of previously taxed income. The Senate amendment allows a subchapter S corporation's previously taxed income to be distributed to the shareholders tax free even though as a result of accelerated depreciation the corporation has undistributed earnings and profits. The amendment is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

SECTIONS OMITTED FROM SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 36

Tax Counseling for the Elderly

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment authorizes the IRS to enter into agreements with private organizations to provide training and technical assistance to prepare volunteers as tax consultants for the elderly. It authorizes tax-free reimbursement to volunteers for transportation, meals and other expenses. The Secretary would be authorized to hire retiree-annuitants who would work up to 720 hours a year without losing their pensions. The provision also authorizes Secretary to provide publicity for tax provisions of particular importance to the elderly.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision.

Commission on Value Added Taxation

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment establishes a 20-member Commission to study the effects of a value-added tax on Government finance, savings, consumption, capital formation and international trade policy, as well as considering the tax as an alternative revenue source for social security financing. A final report is due to the President and to Congress not later than December 31, 1977. Up to $1,000,000 is authorized for the Commission.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision.

United States International Trade Commission

2401-2406. U.S. International Trade Commission

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law (section 330(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930), if a majority of the Commissioners on the International Trade Commission voting on an escape clause or market disruption case under section 201 or 406 of the Trade Act of 1974, respectively, cannot agree on an injury determination or a remedy finding or recommendation, then the President may consider the "findings" agreed upon by one-half the number of Commissioners voting to be the "findings" of the Commission. If the Commission is equally divided into two groups, the President may consider the finding of either group to be the finding of the Commission. Also under present law, a Commissioner must leave office on the day his term expires whether or not his successor is ready to take office.

The Senate amendment provides that the President must consider as the finding of the Commission on remedy the remedy finding agreed upon by a plurality of the Commissioners voting on an escape clause or market disruption case if there is no majority finding on remedy. If the Commission is divided on the remedy question into two or more equal groups, the President must consider the finding of one group as the finding of the Commission on remedy. The Senate amendment does not change present law with respect to the vote on injury, but only those Commissioners voting affirmatively on injury may vote on the remedy question. For purposes of the Congressional override in sections 202 and 203 of the Trade Act of 1974, the plurality finding on remedy and the finding chosen by the President in the case of a tie vote on remedy are considered to be the findings of the Commission.

Under the Senate amendment, a Commissioner may continue to serve until his successor takes office. The Senate amendment also increases the membership of the Commission from six to seven members, and makes certain procedural and organizational changes in the Commission.

Conference agreement.—Under the conference agreement, if a majority of the Commissioners voting on an escape clause or market disruption case cannot agree on a remedy finding, then the remedy finding agreed upon by a plurality of not less than 3 Commissioners shall be treated as the remedy finding of the Commission for the purposes of the Congressional override in sections 202 and 203 of the Trade Act of 1974. If the Commission is tied on the remedy vote, and each voting group includes not less than 3 Commissioners, then (1) if the President takes the action recommended by one of those groups, the remedy finding agreed upon by the other group shall, for purposes of the Congressional override, be treated as the remedy finding of the Commission, or (2) if the President takes action which differs from the action agreed upon by both such groups, the remedy finding agreed upon by either such group may be considered by the Congress as the remedy finding of the Commission for purposes of the Congressional override. It is the intention of the conferees that this apply only for purposes of implementing the Congressional override in sections 202 and 203 of the Trade Act of 1974. It is not intended that this provision affect in any way the rules of procedure of the International Trade Commission.

Further, the conferees strongly urge the Commissioners to reach majority agreement on all determinations, findings, and recommendations in all cases.

Under the conference agreement, a Commissioner may continue to serve as a Commissioner after the expiration of his term of office until his successor is appointed and qualified.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 38

Additional miscellaneous amendments

2501. Certain Disability Payments for Injuries Resulting From Acts of Terrorism

House bill.—No provision.

Senate Amendment.—Present law contains no special provision for disability payments to civilian government employees resulting from acts of terrorism. The committee amendment allows disability payments for injuries to civilian government employees resulting from acts of terrorism the same exclusion as combat-related injuries which are provided for in a separate amendment. The amendment applis to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

2502. Contributions of Certain Government Publications

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—In most situations, Government publications received by taxpayers without charge (e.g., copies of the Congressional Record received by Members of Congress) or at a reduced price are treated as capital assets under current law. One consequence of that treatment is that taxpayers can claim a deduction for the full fair market value of any Government publication which they contribute to a charity (such as a library or a university) for a use related to the charity's exempt purpose. Under the Senate amendment U.S. Government publications which are received by any taxpayer from the Government without charge or below the price at which they are sold to the general public are no longer to be treated as capital assets in the hands of the taxpayer receiving the publications. This treatment is also to apply to any Government publication held by a taxpayer in whose hands the basis of that publication is determined by reference to its basis in the hands of a person receiving it free or at a reduced price. This provision applies to sales, exchanges, and contributions made after the date of enactment.

2503. Lobbying by Public Charities

House bill.—Under present law, an organization is not exempt from income tax and cannot receive deductible contributions as a charity unless "no substantial part of the activities of [the organization] is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation."

There is no provision in this bill. However, H.R. 13500, as passed by the House, allows public charities (other than churches, conventions and associations of churches, and certain support organizations) to elect to come under a new expenditures test for lobbying. The new test establishes sliding scale limitations for overall lobbying and grass roots lobbying. An excise tax is imposed on minor violations; loss of exemption is reserved for sustained excessive violations. H.R. 13500 requires disclosure of lobbying expenditures by electing organizations. An organization eligible to elect cannot become exempt under section 501(c)(4) (social welfare organizations) if it loses its section 501(c)(3) charitable exemption because of excessive lobbying. H.R. 13500 prohibits persons from duducting out-of-pocket expenditures on behalf of any charity if the expenditures are made to influence legislation. H.R. 13500 generally applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as H.R. 13500, except that rules disallowing deductions for out-of-pocket expenditures made to influence legislation do not apply to expenditures of organizations that are not eligible to elect the new expenditures tests. This provision is generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees observe that, although this provision of the Senate amendment is identical to H.R. 13500 (except that rules disallowing deductions for out-of-pocket expenditures made to influence legislation do not apply to expenditures of organizations that are not eligible to elect the new expenditures tests), the report of the Commiittee on Finance on this provision (S. Rept. 94-938, pt. 2, p. 79) is an abbreviated version of the report of the Committee on Ways and Means accompanying H.R. 13500 (H. Rept. 94-1210). The conferees do not wish the passage of this provision to be construed as a rejection of the matters contained in the House Committee Report accompanying H.R. 13500 and therefore specifically incorporate the additional matters contained in such report and not in the report of the Committee on Finance by reference, except for the following paragraph contained in the House report accompanying H.R. 13500 with respect to which the conferees specifically take no position:

"Your committee's bill excludes from the new rules not only churches and conventions or associations of churches, but also integrated auxiliaries of churches or of conventions or associations of churches. Because proposed regulations have recently been published regarding the meaning of the term "integrated auxiliary" and because that term is used in this bill your committee wishes to make it clear—in agreement with the conclusions of the proposed regulations—that theological seminaries, religious youth organizations, and men's fellowship associations which are associated with churches would generally constitute integrated auxiliaries. Your committee also intends (in agreement with the conclusions in the proposed regulations) that hospitals, elementary grade schools, orphanages, and old-age homes are organizations which frequently are established without regard to church relationships and are to be treated for these purposes the same as corresponding secular charitable, etc., organizations that is, such entities are not to be regarded as "integrated auxiliaries." (See H. Rept. 91–782, p. 286, the conference report on H.R. 13270, the Tax Reforme Act of 1969.) However, in a given case, a hospital, school, orphanage, or home may nevertheless be excluded from election under this bill because it is a member organization of an affiliated group which includes a church. Members of affiliated groups which include churches, et cetera, are treated the same as churches, et cetera, for purposes of this bill." (H. Rept. 94–1210, pp. 15–16.)

2504. Tax Liens, etc., Not To Constitute Acquisition Indebtedness

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Generally, under present law, an exempt organization is taxed on investment income only to the extent there is "acquisition indebtednes" on the investment property generating the income. The Internal Revenue Service has taken the position that special assessments (payable in installments) imposed by a State or local government unit constitute acquisition indebtedness.

The Senate amendment provides that amounts of indebtedness for taxes or special assessments by State or local governmental units and secured by a lien on property are not acquisition indebtedness until, and to the extent that, the amounts become due and payable and the organization has had an opportunity to pay them. This provision applies to all taxable years ending after December 31, 1969.

2505. Extension of Private Foundation Transitional Rule For Sale of Business Holdings

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the self-dealing rules for private foundations contain a transition rule which expired on January 1, 1975. This rule permitted private foundations to sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of, certain "nonexcess" business holdings to disqualified persons.

The Senate amendment extends the period for application of this transitional rule. This provision applies to dispositions occurring after the date of enactment and before January 1, 1977.

2506. Private Operating Foundations; Imputed Interest

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, private operating foundations, including libraries and museums, normally are required to spend annually for charitable purposes an amount equal to at least two-thirds of their minimum investment return. The Senate amendment reduces the amount that a private operating foundation must spend for charitable purposes to 3 percent of its noncharitable assets.

Present law also requires each private nonoperating foundation to distribute annually an amount equal to the greater of the foundation's adjusted net income or its minimum investment return. Adjusted net income includes imputed interest. The Senate amendment excludes from a private foundation's adjusted net income amounts of imputed interest on sales made prior to January 1, 1970.

Under present law, all private foundations pay an excise tax equal to 4 percent of their net investment income. The Senate amendment exempts libraries and museums from the tax on net investment income if the library or museum elects to spend for charitable purposes an amount equal to 5 percent of its noncharitable assets.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on the exclusion of imputed interest from the adjusted net income of a private foundation. However, the conference agreement deletes the portion of the Senate amendment reducing the required payout for private operating foundations and exempting libraries and museums from the tax on net investment income in certain cases.

2509. Study of Tax Incentives by Joint Committee

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment requires the Joint Committee to study, in consultation with Treasury, tax incentives, especially as used to provide stimulus to the economy during recession. A report is to be made to the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee no later than September 30, 1977.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 39

Other miscellaneous amendments

2601. Group Prepaid Legal Services

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, depending on the structure of the specific group legal services plan, an employee must pay tax on either (1) his share of employer contributions to the plan on his behalf, or (2) the value of legal services or reimbursements received by him under the plan. The Senate amendment excludes from an employee's income both (1) employer contributions and (2) benefits received under qualified group legal services plans. It applies to plans established to provide personal legal services for employees, their spouses and dependents through prepayment of, or advance provision for, legal fees. Plans must be organized through tax-exempt organizations or trusts (or established through insurance companies). To qualify, plans must be nondiscriminatory with respect to enrollment and benefits. Limitations are placed on amounts contributed to provide benefits for employee-shareholders or owners. A transition period is provided for existing plans to meet the statutory requirements. The amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that it applies prospectively only for five taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976, and ending before January 1, 1982. The conference agreement also requires a study of the provision by the Departments of the Treasury and of Labor, with final reports to be submitted to the House Committee on Ways and Means and to the Senate Committee on Finance not later than December 31, 1980.

2602. Certain Hospital Services

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, income received by tax-exempt hospitals from providing services to other tax-exempt hospitals is taxed as "unrelated business taxable income." The Senate amendment exempts from the tax on unrelated business income the income that a tax-exempt hospital receives for providing certain services to other small tax-exempt hospitals each serving 100 or fewer inpatients.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, with one modification. Under that modification, the exemption from the unrelated business income tax is provided only to the extent that the services are provided at a fee or other charge that does not exceed the actual cost of providing those services plus a reasonable amount for a return on the capital goods used in providing those services. For this purpose, the actual cost of providing the services includes straight-line depreciation. The conferees intend that the IRS not require that hospitals providing the services keep detailed records to substantiate compliance with this new requirement, so long as the fees charged for the services provided by the hospital reasonably approximate the cost of providing those services.

2603. Clinical Services of Cooperative Hospitals

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, cooperative organizations providing certain specified services for tax-exempt hospitals are also tax-exempt organizations. The specified permissible services do not include clinical services. The Senate amendment adds clinical services to the specified services permitted to be performed by a tax-exempt cooperative service organization.

2604. Certain Charitable Contributions of Inventory

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a taxpayer's deduction for contributions of appreciated ordinary income property, such as inventory, is limited to the taxpayer's basis in the property. The Senate amendment generally allows corporations a deduction for the basis plus one-half of the appreciation of ordinary income property, such as inventory, but the deduction in no event is to exceed twice the basis of the contributed property. The new provisions apply only to property donated to a public charity or private operating foundation for use in its exempt purpose for the care of the ill, the needy, or infants and do not apply to amounts treated as ordinary income because of "recapture" rules. Also, property which does not satisfy the relevant requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act is not eligible for an increased deduction under these provisions. These provisions apply to contributions made after the date of enactment.

SECTIONS OMITTED FROM SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 39

Credit for Certain Education Expenses

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment provides a credit for certain educational expenses paid by an individual for himself, his spouse, or his dependents. It applies to tuition, fees, books and supplies in regard to college programs leading to undergraduate degrees and to vocational courses leading to program certificates, but only for full-time students. The credit is limited to $100 in 1977, $150 in 1978, $200 in 1979, and $250 in 1980 and following years.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision.

The conferees on the part of the House state that every effort will be made to give the House of Representatives an opportunity to consider this provision in separate legislation.

Interest on Certain Governmental Obligations for Hospital Construction

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, public hospitals operated by governmental units may be financed with tax-exempt bonds. Private hospitals are not included among exempt activities for which tax-exempt industrial development bonds may be issued without limit. Thus, private hospitals are not eligible for tax-exempt industrial development bonds, except under the $1 million or $5 million small issue exemption. The Senate amendment increases the $5 million small issue exemption to $20 million for private hospitals which are certified as necessary by appropriate State agencies. The amendment applies to obligations issued after December 31, 1976, in taxable years beginning after that date.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 40

House bill.—No provision.

ADDITIONAL SENATE AMENDMENTS

2701. Employee Stock Ownership Plan Regulations

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment prohibits retroactive application of Treasury and Labor Department regulations under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, title I of the 1974 Pension Act, and the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 relating primarily to employee stock ownership plans.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement reaffirms Congressional intent with respect to employee stock ownership plans and expresses concern that administrative rules and regulations may frustrate Congressional intent. In this connection, it has come to the attention of Congress that proposed regulations issued by both the Department of the Treasury and the Department of Labor on July 30, 1976, may make it virtually impossible for ESOPs, and especially leveraged ESOPs, to be established and function effectively. The following areas are of specific concern to the conferees.

(1) Independent third party.—The proposed rules would prohibit loans (or loan guarantees) by fiduciaries to employee stock ownership plans unless the loans are arranged and approved by an independent third party. These rules would, for example, prevent a bank which serves as trustee for an ESOP from making a loan to the plan and would prevent the employer-fiduciary who established the plan from providing a loan guarantee.

In view of other rules presently in effect, which require that the interest rate for any such loan be reasonable, that the loan be primarily for the benefit of participants or their beneficiaries, and that the only collateral the plan can give the lender is the employer's stock purchased with the loan proceeds, the requirement of an independent third party is unduly burdensome. Consequently, the conferees believe that the regulations should deal directly with possible abuses which may occur in the administration of plans rather than attempting to require a plan to incur the burden of dealing through an independent third party. Similarly, the conferees believe that an independent third party should not be required to arrange and approve a sale of stock between an employer (or shareholder of the employer) and an ESOP. The conferees have not considered whether the principles applicable to ESOPs in connection with loans to the plan or sales of employer stock should apply in the case of ther exemptions from the prohibited transaction rules and, accordingly, no inference should be drawn regarding those other exemptions.

(2) Put option.—The proposed regulations would require that an employer provide each employee who receives stock from a leveraged ESOP or an investment credit ESOP with a 2-year "put option" if the stock is not listed on an exchange.

Although the conferees agree that a market should be provided for employer stock distributed by an ESOP to an employee, the conferees believe that a put option for a period considerably shorter than two years will properly protect employees and that a put under which the employer must pay for tendered stock over too short a period would effectively deny the employer the benefits of capital formation Congress sought to provide it under an ESOP. On the contrary, the conferees believe that the payment by the employer could be made in substantially equal installments payable over a reasonable period, taking into account the need to protect employees and the need of the employer for capital.

(3) Stock purchased with loan proceeds.—Under the proposed regulations, employer stock held by an ESOP which is purchased with the proceeds of a loan is to be placed in a suspense account from which it is to be released under a formula which is not in accordance with the common business practice under which the stock is released from the account as loan principal is amortized.

The conferees believe that the regulations should allow the stock to be released as the loan principal is repaid if (a) the principal is amortized over a reasonable period (taking into account the facts and circumstances, including the interests of plan participants and the employer's need for capital), and (b) the employees are adequately informed regarding their rights to employer stock held by the plan.

(4) Allocation of stock.—Under the proposed regulations, employer stock acquired by an ESOP with loan proceeds must be allocated to plan participants as it is released from the suspense account discussed in (3) above.

The conferees believe that the regulations should permit the allocation of stock to be made in accordance with a formula more similar to that provided for ESOPs in the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. § 2373(f)(4)).

(5) Voting rights.—The proposed regulations would require that employees be permitted to direct the voting of employer stock allocated to their accounts under a leveraged ESOP even though other types of employee plans need not provide employees with these rights. (The Tax Reduction Act of 1975 requires that employees be permitted to direct the voting of employer stock allocated to their accounts under an investment credit ESOP but not by other ESOPs.)

The conferees believe that the regulations should not distinguish between leveraged ESOPs and other employee plans in this regard.

(6) Dividend restrictions.—Under the proposed regulations, employer stock held by an ESOP must have unrestricted dividend rights. Dividend restrictions are commonly required in connection with loans. Consequently, the conferees believe that such restrictions should be permitted if they are required in connection with a loan to the ESOP for the purchase of employer securities (but only if the restrictions terminate when the loan is repaid) or if they apply also to a significant portion of the employer stock not held by the ESOP.

(7) Right of first refusal.—The proposed regulations prohibit a leveraged ESOP from acquiring with the proceeds of a loan employer stock subject to a right of first refusal. Because the shareholders of many corporations (especially smaller businesses) believe that a right of first refusal is necessary to protect their interests, the conferees believe that the prohibition will have a chilling effect upon the establishment of ESOPs and should not be prescribed.

(8) Treatment of sale as redemption.—Under the proposed regulations, the sale of stock by a corporate shareholder to the corporation's ESOP could, depending upon the facts and circumstances, be treated as a redemption of the stock by the corporation. If the sale is treated as a redemption, the proceeds of the sale could be considered dividend income rather than capital gain. The conferees believe if such a rule is authorized and proper, its application should not be restricted to ESOPs.

(9) Nonvoting common stock, etc.—The proposed regulations impose special rules on ESOPs which limit the extent to which the plan can acquire employer securities, other than voting common stock with unrestricted dividend rights, with the proceeds of a loan. (The Tax Reduction Act of 1975 does not allow the additional investment credit for nonvoting employer stock.) The conferees believe that the usual rules applicable to employee plans properly protect the interests of plan participants and that these special rules are not needed.

(10) Prepayment penalty.—The proposed regulations specifically prohibit any loan made to an ESOP from containing a provision for a prepayment penalty. The conferees believe that the question of such penalties should be a matter of negotiation between the ESOP and the lender and that prepayment penalties should not be prohibited in all cases (they shall not be allowed, of course, if for example, payment of a penalty would be imprudent).

(11) No calls or other options.—The proposed regulations prohibit stock acquired with an ESOP loan from being subject to any calls or other options. There is no provision for restrictions which may be required by State law. The conferees believe that in the limited situation where restrictions are imposed by law, stock in an ESOP should be permitted to have restrictions necessary to comply with the law.

(12) Comparability.—The proposed regulations do not permit an ESOP and another plan to be considered a single plan for purposes of determining whether the plans meet the anti-discrimination requirements of the tax law. Although the conferees agree that an ESOP and another type of plan should not be considered a single plan for this purpose, the conferees believe that this rule should not be applied to disqualify a plan already in existence and that two or more ESOPs can be considered as a single plan in testing the coverage and contributions or benefits under the plans.

As stated in the Report of the Senate Finance Committee on the bill, an ESOP is designed to "build equity ownership of shares in the employer corporation into its employees substantially in proportion to their relative incomes." (Sen. Rept. No. 94-938, page 180.) The conferees understand that under the proposed regulations, an ESOP could be integrated with the social security system so that employer stock would not be allocated to employees substantially in proportion to their compensation. The conferees believe that social security integration is not consistent with the purposes of an ESOP. The conferees believe, however, the prohibition on integration should not apply to ESOPs which are now integrated.

(13) Inferences.—Although the conferees have commented on the merits of the proposed regulations, these comments should not be taken as inferring approval or disapproval of the provisions not commented upon.

Expenses of Amateur Athletes Engaging in National or International Competition

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Presently, there is no tax credit for expenses of amateur athletes. The Senate amendment allows a tax credit for 20 percent of the first $2,500 of an amateur athlete's nonreimbursed expenses of engaging in certain national or international sports competition, such as in Olympic or Pan American games or trials, world championships, or national championships in the United States. The portion of the credit not used by an athlete can be claimed by the athlete's parent (if the athlete is a dependent) or spouse, with certain limitations, for his expenditures on behalf of the athlete. This provision applies to expenses paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

2702. Exemption of Certain Amateur Athletic Organizations From Tax

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, organizations which teach youth or which are affiliated with charitable organizations may be exempt under section 501(c) (3) and may receive tax-deductible contributions. Other organizations which foster national or international amateur sports competition may be exempt from taxation under other provisions (such as 501(c) (4) or (6)) but often do not qualify to receive tax-deductible contributions.

The Senate amendment permits an organization the primary purpose of which is to foster national or international amateur sports competition to qualify as an organization described in section 501(c)(3) and to receive tax-deductible contributions. This provision applies after the date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but provides that, to qualify for tax exemption as a charitable organization and for the receipt of deductible contributions, the organization must not make available athletic equipment or facilities. This restriction is intended to prevent the allowance of these benefits for organizations which, like social clubs, provide facilities and equipment for their members. This provision is not intended to adversely affect the qualification for charitable tax-exempt status or tax deductible contributions of any organization which would qualify under the standards of existing law.

2703. Taxable Status of Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law a corporation organized under an Act of Congress is not generally exempt from Federal taxation unless that Act so provides. The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation was not specifically exempted from Federal taxation by ERISA (the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974). The Senate amendment amends ERISA to clarify the intent of Congress that the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation is to be exempt from all Federal taxation except taxes imposed under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (social security taxes) and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (unemployment taxes). The exemption applies from September 2, 1974 (the date of enactment of ERISA).

2704. Level Premium Plans Covering Owner-Employees

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law an owner-employee covered by an H.R. 10 plan may contribute each year an amount in excess of the general H.R. 10 percentage limit (15 percent of earned income, but not in excess of $7,500 in any case) to a plan funded with level payment annuity contracts, if the fixed payment does not exceed $7,500 and does not exceed the owner-employee's three-year average of deductible amounts. The amount in excess of 15 percent of the owner-employee's earned income is not deductible. A separate provision for all qualified plans limits contributions to 25 percent of earned income. The Senate amendment allows the owner-employee to make such level payments without regard to the overall 25-percent limitation. The new rule applies for years beginning after 1975 (the effective date of the overall limitation).

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but adds rules regarding the treatment of contributions under the anti-discrimination rules applicable to pension plans.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 46

270. Lump-Sum Distributions From Pension Plans

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, the part of a lump-sum distribution earned before 1974 is treated as capital gain and the post-1973 part is taxed, if the taxpayer elects, as ordinary income in a "separate basket," with 10-year income averaging. If the election is not made, the post-1973 part of the distribution is taxed as ordinary income under the usual rules.

Under the Senate amendment a taxpayer may irrevocably elect to treat all of a lump sum distribution as if it were earned after 1973 so that it will be taxed as ordinary income in a separate basket, with 10-year income averaging. The election applies to distributions made after 1975 in taxable years beginning after 1975.

Deductions for attending Foreign Conventions

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment affirms that Internal Revenue Service regulations relating to foreign travel for business purposes accurately reflect the intent of Congress and represent a responsible limitation on the deduction of foreign travel expenses paid or incurred in connection with the attendance at business meetings and conventions held outside the United States.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision. (This matter is dealt with in connection with section 602, Senate Amendment number 19.)

2706. Tax Treatment of the Grantor of Certain Options

House bill.—Under present IRS rulings, gain from the lapse of an option and gain or loss from a closing transaction in options is generally treated as ordinary income or loss. The House bill contains no provision in this area. However, House-passed H.R. 12224 provides that gain from the lapse of an option and gain or loss from a closing transaction in options is to be treated as short-term capital gain or loss.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement adopts the Senate amendment. The provisions, which apply to options granted after September 1, 1976, are the same as those of H.R. 12224, and the conferees agree with the interpretation of those provisions in House Report 94–1192.

In addition, the conferees clarify the intent that income from a closing transaction in options, as well as income from the lapse of an option, is to be treated as qualifying income. For purposes of section 851(b) (4), the "issuer" of an option is the corporation whose stock or securities underlie the option (even though the option may be written by an options exchange, for example).

The conferees understand that a question exists under present law as to whether a corporation realizes income when warrants to purchase the corporation's stock expire unexercised. This issue was not considered by the Congress in connection with this amendment, and no inference is intended (for the past or for the future) with respect to whether the expiration of warrants issued by a corporation for its own stock should, or should not, result in recognition of taxable income to the corporation.

2707. Exempt-Interest Dividends of Regulated Investment Companies

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, distributions by a regulated investment company (commonly called a mutual fund) from capital gains recognized by it may be treated as capital gain to its shareholders (i.e., the character of the capital gain is "flowed-through" to the shareholders). Under certain conditions, similar flow-through treatment is provided for dividend income. However, there is presently no flow-through treatment for tax-exempt interest and, consequently, distributions of tax-exempt interest by a regulated investment company are taxable income to its shareholders. The Senate amendment permits, in certain cases, the character of tax-exempt interest distributed by a regulated investment company to flow-through as tax-exempt interest to its shareholders. The new rules apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Amortization of Replacement Railroad Ties

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The amendment would permit railroads which currently use the retirement-replacement method of depreciating track costs to deduct currently the full cost of replacement ties.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision. (This matter, however, is dealt with in section 1701(a), Senate amendment numbered 30.)

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 51 (OMITTED)

Commission on Tax Simplification and Modernization

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment establishes a 9-member Commission on Tax Simplification and Modernization to study the modernization and simplification of the Internal Revenue Code, including possible reduction in rates by modifying or eliminating deductions, exemptions, credits, etc. The Commission is to begin on February 1, 1977, with appointments to be made within 30 days. A final report to the President and Congress is to be made not later than August 1, 1978. An appropriation of up to $1 million is authorized.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement omits this provision. The Treasury Department is currently conducting a study on this subject, and is expected to submit its study in January 1977. 2709. Transfers of Oil and Gas Property Within the Same Controlled Group or Family

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment permits percentage depletion to be retained on property which is transferred by individuals, corporations and other entities, all of which are part of the same controlled group after the transfer (and thus must continue to combine oil production to determine the maximum number of barrels of oil eligible for percentage depletion). However, if any transferee ceases to be part of the same controlled group as the transferor at some later time, percentage depletion is to be disallowed with respect to the transferred property as of that date (in order to prevent a proliferation of the limited exemption from the repeal of percentage depletion). This provision is effective January 1, 1975, and is applicable to taxable years ending after December 31, 1974.

SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 55

Otherwise, the custodial parent receives the exemption. The Senate amendment allows the noncustodial parent to receive an exemption for a child if he or she contributes at least $1,200 for each of the children (in addition to the other requirements in present law). SENATE AMENDMENT NUMBERED 58

2712. Deferral of Gain on Involuntary Conversion of Real Property

House bill.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a taxpayer can elect to defer any gain realized on the involuntary conversion of real property held for productive use in a trade or business (and not stock in trade or other property held primarily for sale) if the converted property is replaced by property of a like kind. However, in order to qualify, the converted property must be replaced no later than two years after the close of the first taxable year in which any of the gain is realized. If the taxpayer makes the election, the statutory period for assessment of a deficiency does not expire until 3 years after notice of replacement or notice of intent not to replace.

The Senate amendment removes the limits on the types of real property eligible for deferral by eliminating the requirement that the replacement property be similar or related in service or use to the converted property. The amendment extends the period for replacement to four years after the close of the first taxable year in which any of the gain from the conversion is realized. It extends the statutory period for assessment of a deficiency to 5 years after notice of replacement or notice of intent not to replace. The provision applies to dispositions of property after 1974 unless condemnation proceedings began prior to the date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement does not remove the limits on the types of eligible real property. However, it follows the Senate amendment in extending the replacement period but the extension is only to three years.

2713. Sale of Residence by Elderly

House bill.—No provision.

However, if the adjusted sales price exceeds $20,000, he may exclude only that portion of the gain which $20,000 bears to the adjusted sales price. The Senate amendment increases the $20,000 amount to $35,000. It applies to taxable years beginning after 1976.

2714. Additional Changes in Subchapter S Shareholder Rules

Senate amendment.—Under present law, a corporation is required to have 10 or fewer shareholders in order to elect and maintain subchapter S treatment. A trust may not be a shareholder in a subchapter S corporation. Also, a husband and wife are treated as one shareholder where the stock is community property or held jointly by them. All shareholders must consent to an election or revocation of subchapter S status. However, a subchapter S election will be terminated if any new shareholder fails to consent to the election, generally within a period of 30 days.

The Senate amendment provides that where either husband or wife, or both, die, the estate of the deceased will be treated as one shareholder with the surviving spouse (or her estate) if husband and wife were treated as one shareholder while both were living and the stock continues to be held in the same proportions as before death. In addition, grantor trusts and voting trusts are to be eligible shareholders; and, any type of trust which receives stock under a will is to be an eligible shareholder, but only for a period of 60 days. Finally, a subchapter S election will not be terminated unless a new shareholder affirmatively refuses to consent to the election within 60 days. The Senate amedment is effective for tax years beginning after December 31, 1976.

"(3) Limitation of personal liability of distributee.—The distributee of the property shall be personally liable for the tax imposed by section 2601 only to the extent of an amount equal to the fair market value (determined as of the time of the distribution) of the property received by the distributee in the distribution.

"(b) Lien.—The tax imposed by section 2601 on any transfer shall be a lien on the property transferred until the tax is paid in full or becomes unenforceable by reason of lapse of time.

The preceding sentence shall be applied to transfers from one or more trusts in the order in which such transfers are made or deemed made.

"(7) Coordination with subsection (a).—

If—

"(i) the death of an individual or any other occurrence is a taxable termination with respect to any property, and

"(ii) such occurrence also requires the distribution of part or all of such property in distribution which would (but for this subparagraph) be a taxable distribution, then a taxable distribution shall be deemed not to have occurred with respect to the portion described in clause (i).

"(B) Certain prior transfers.—To the extent that—

"(i) the deemed transferor in any prior transfer of the property of the trust being transferred in this transfer was assigned to the same generation as (or a lower generation than) the generation assignment of the deemed transferor in this transfer.

"(ii) the transferee in such prior transfer was assigned to the same generation as (or a higher generation than) the generation assignment of the transferee in this transfer, and

"(iii) such transfers do not have the effect of avoiding tax under this chapter with respect to any transfer, the terms 'taxable termination' and 'taxable distribution' do not include this later transfer.

"(e) Limited Power To Appoint Among Lineal Descendants of Grantor Not Taken Into Account in Certain Cases.—For purposes of this chapter, if any individual does not have any present or future power in the trust other than a power to dispose of the corpus of the trust or the income therefrom to a beneficiary or a class of beneficiaries who are lineal descendants of the grantor assigned to a generation younger than the generation assignment of such individual, then such individual shall be treated as not having any power in the trust.

"Sec. 2614. Special Rules.

"(a) Basis Adjustment.—If property is transferred to any person pursuant to a generation-skipping transfer which occurs before the death of the deemed transferor, the basis of such property in the hands of the transferee shall be increased (but not above the fair market value of such property) by an amount equal to that portion of the tax imposed by section 2601 with respect to the transfer which is attributable to the excess of the fair market value of such property over its adjusted basis immediately before the transfer. If property is transferred in a generation-skipping transfer subject to tax under this chapter which occurs at the same time, as or after, the death of the deemed transferor, the basis of such property shall be adjusted in a manner similar to the manner provided by section 1023 without regard to subsection (d) thereof (relating to basis of property passing from a decedent dying after December 31, 1976, fair market value).

"(b) Nonresidents Not Citizens of the United States.—If the deemed transferor of any transfer is, at the time of the transfer, a nonresident not a citizen of the United States and—

"(1) if the deemed transferor is alive at the time of the transfer, there shall be taken into account only property which would be taken into account for purposes of chapter 12, or

"(2) if the deemed transferor has died at the same time as, or before, the transfer there shall be taken into account only property which would be taken into account for purposes of chapter 11.

ESTATE AND GIFT TAX PROVISIONS

Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee of Conference

The House bill (H.R. 10612) did not contain revisions to the estate and gift taxes, and as a result Senate amendment numbered 35 will be taken back to the House of Representatives and Senate in technical disagreement. The amendment which will be offered in the House of Representatives and Senate relating to estate and gift taxes substantially modifies the Senate amendment and adopts many of the provisions contained in H.R. 14844. In those cases where the proposed amendment follows H.R. 14844, the conferees agree with and incorporate the explanation of those provisions contained in House Report 94–1380 (the Ways and Means Committee Report on H.R. 14844), except as modified in this statement.

Unified Credit

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the estate of each decedent who was a resident or citizen of the U.S. is entitled to an exemption of $60,000 for estate tax purposes and a donor who is not a nonresident alien is entitled to an exemption of $30,000 for gift tax purposes. H.R. 14844 provides a unified credit in lieu of the present exemptions for estate and gift taxes. The amount of the credit is $30,000 for gifts made in, and for estates of decedents dying in, 1977 and increases $5,000 each year until 1979 when the credit is $40,000 (equivalent to an exemption of $153,750).

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment provides a credit in lieu of the present exemption for estate tax purposes, but retains the present gift tax exemption. The amount of the credit is $30,000 for estates of decedents dying in 1977 and increases $5,000 each year until 1981 when the credit is $50,000 (equivalent to an exemption of $197,667).

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement provides a unified credit of $47,000 (equivalent to an exemption of $175,625) in lieu of the present exemptions for estate and gift taxes. The credit is to be phased-in over a 5-year period. Subject to a transitional rule for certain gifts, the amount of the credit is $30,000 for gifts made in, and decedents dying in, 1977, $34,000 in 1978, $38,000 in 1979, $42,500 in 1980, and $47,000 in 1981.

The unified credit allowable is to be reduced by an amount equal to 20 percent of the amount allowed as a specific exemption under present law for gifts made after September 8, 1976, and before January 1, 1977. However, the unified credit is not to be reduced for any amount allowed as a specific exemption for gifts made prior to September 9, 1976. As a transitional rule for gift tax purposes, only $6,000 of the unified credit can be applied with respect to gifts made after December 31, 1976, and prior to July 1, 1977.

Unification of Estate and Gift Tax Rates

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, an estate tax is imposed upon transfers at death and a gift tax is imposed on gifts during lifetime. Each tax has a separate rate schedule with the gift tax rate schedule being three-fourths of the estate tax rate schedule for corresponding brackets.

H.R. 14844 provides a unified rate schedule for estate and gift taxes. The lowest effective rate (after taking into account the unified credit) is 32 percent. The highest rate is 70 percent for cumulative tax able transfers in excess of $5 million. This provision applies to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976, and gifts made after that date.

The conference agreement modifies the method of determining the tax imposed on transfers of U.S. property by a decedent who was a nonresident alien. Since a separate schedule with reduced rates is provided for estates of nonresident aliens, the deathtime credit, or "offset," for tax on lifetime transfers, which is applied against the tax computed on cumulative lifetime and deathtime transfers, is to be determined under the same rate schedule that is applicable at death rather than the schedule that applies to the lifetime transfers of all donors.

Transfers Made Within 3 Years of Death

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, transfers made within 3 years of death are presumed to be made in '"contemplation of death" and included in the decedent's gross estate unless the executor can prove to the contrary.

H.R. 14844 eliminates the contemplation of death presumption and provides for the inclusion in the decedent's gross estate of all gifts (in excess of the $3,000 annual exclusion) made within the 3-year period prior to the decedent's death.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

This provision applies to gifts made after December 31, 1976.

Gross-up for Gift Taxes

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the tax paid with respect to a gift is not included in the estate or gift tax base. Thus, an amount equal to the gift tax will be removed from a decedent's gross estate and also allowed as a credit against estate tax if the gift is included in the gross estate even though the transfer is a "death-bed transfer." However, if the transfer had not been made during lifetime, the entire amount would be included in the decedent's gross estate.

H.R. 14844 requires the gift tax on gifts made within 3 years of the decedent's death to be included (or "grossed-up") in the decedent's gross estate.

This provision applies to gifts made after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Increase in Estate Tax Marital Deduction

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the estate of each decedent is permitted a deduction for property passing to a surviving spouse up to one-half of the adjusted gross estate.

H.R. 14844 increases the maximum estate tax marital deduction to the greater of $250,000 or one-half of the decedent's adjusted gross estate.

This provision applies to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976.

Increase in Gift Tax Marital Deduction

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, in the case of gifts, the maximum allowable deduction is one-half of the value of the property transferred to the spouse.

H.R. 14844 provides an unlimited marital deduction for the first $100,000 of lifetime transfers to a spouse. Thereafter, the deduction allowed is 50 percent of gifts in excess of $200,000.

This provision applies to gifts made after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Joint Interests

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the entire value of property owned in joint tenancy is included in the decedent's gross estate except for the portion of property which is attributable to the consideration furnished by the survivor.

H.R. 14844 replaces the "consideration furnished test" with a fractional interest rule in certain cases where property is held by husband and wife with rights of survivorship. Under the fractional interest rule, where a joint tenancy is created by a transfer subject to gift tax at the time of creation, the property is then treated as belonging 50 percent to each spouse for estate tax purposes.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Special Valuation for Certain Property

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the value of the property included in the gross estate of the decedent is its fair market value at the date of the decedent's death (or at the alternate valuation date). One of the most important factors in determining fair market value is the "highest and best use" to which the property can be put.

H.R. 14844 provides that, if certain conditions are met, the executor may elect to value qualified real property included in the decedent's gross estate on the basis of such property's value in its current use rather than on the basis of its highest and best use. Qualified real property includes property used for farming or other closely held business use. This special valuation may not be used to decrease the value of the decedent's gross estate by more than $500,000. Also, H.R. 14844 provides specific valuation methods for qualifying real property.

In general, the tax benefits derived from the special valuation are recaptured if the property is disposed of to nonfamily members or ceases to be used for farming or closely held business purposes within 15 years after the death of the decedent (with a phase-out of the amount recaptured over the last 5 years).

This provision applies to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as H.R. 14844 except that (1) the special valuation is available for woodland, open pastoral space and historical sites in addition to farms (but not other closely held businesses), (2) the special valuation can reduce the value of the decedent's gross estate by $1 million rather than $500,000, and (3) specified valuation methods for qualifying real property are not provided.

The Senate amendment provides for recapture similar to H.R. 14844 but shortens the recapture period to 10 years (with a phase-out of the amount recaptured over the last 8 years).

A Senate floor amendment (1) modifies the requirements for historical sites to allow an historical site to qualify if the value is at least 25 percent of the decedent's adjusted gross estate, (2) strikes "pastoral" from open pastoral space, and (3) allows both the time the decedent owned the property and the time a member of his family owned the property to count for purposes of satisfying the ownership and qualified use requirements (5 out of the 8 years preceding the decedent's death).

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows H.R. 14844. The conferees intend to make it clear that the rules for special valuation apply to property which passes in trust. Trust property shall be deemed to have passed from the decedent to a qualified heir to the extent that the qualified heir has a present interest in that trust property.

Extension of Time for Payment of Estate Tax

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the estate tax generally must be paid nine months after the decedent's death. However, there are two provisions which permit the estate tax to be paid over a period of up to 10 years. In order to qualify under the first provision (sec. 6166), the value of the closely held business must exceed 35 percent of the value of the gross estate or 50 percent of the taxable estate of the decedent. In order to qualify under the second provision (sec. 6161), the executor must show that payment on the original due date would cause "undue hardship."

H.R. 14844 modifies the first provision discussed above (sec. 6166) by providing for extended payments during a 15-year period for the estate tax attributable to a farm or other closely held business (including a trade or business of being an artist, craftsman, etc.) In order to qualify, the farm or other closely held business must constitute at least 65 percent of the adjusted gross estate. No tax (i.e., only interest) must be paid during the first 5 years and thereafter the tax is payable in equal installments over the next 10 years. A special 4 percent interest rate is provided for the estate tax attributable to the first $1 million of farm or other closely held business property.

H.R. 14844 substitutes a "reasonable cause" standard for the ten-year discretionary extension of estate tax instead of the existing "undue hardship" standard.

A special lien is provided for payment of the deferred taxes and, where this lien procedure is followed, the executor is discharged from personal liability.

This provision applies to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as H.R. 14844 except that (1) in order to qualify, the value of the farm or closely held business must exceed 35 percent of the value of the gross estate or 50 percent of the taxable estate of the decedent, (2) the tax is payable in 12 annual installments beginning at the end of the third year following the due date for the estate tax return, and (3) the special interest rate is 6 percent.

Conference agreement.—In general, the conference agreement makes 4 changes to existing law.

First, the conference agreement follows both H.R. 14844 and the Senate amendment which substitute a "reasonable cause" standard for the "undue hardship" standard under present law in the case of the ten-year discretionary extension for payment of estate tax (sec. 6161(a)(2)). For this purpose, the term "reasonable cause" is to have the same meaning as under present law for granting discretionary extensions up to twelve months (regs. § 20.6161-1(a)).

Second, the conference agreement retains the present ten-year extension for payment of estate tax (sec. 6166) where the value of a closely held business exceeds 35 percent of the value of the gross estate or 50 percent of the taxable estate of the decedent.

Third, the conference agreement adopts the 15-year extension contained in H.R. 14844 as an alternative provision for extending the payment of estate tax attributable to a closely held business that constitutes 65 percent of the decedent's adjusted gross estate.

Fourth, the conference agreement provides a special lien procedure for payment of the estate tax deferred under either of the two extensions for closely held businesses. The executor will be discharged from personal liability where this special lien procedure is followed.

Carryover of Basis of Property

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the cost or other basis of property acquired from or passing from a decedent generally is "stepped-up" to its fair market value at the date of death (or the alternative valuation date). However, where property is transferred by gift, the basis of the property in the hands of the donee is generally the same as the donor's basis (i.e., the donor's basis is "carried over" to the donee).

H.R. 14844 provides that the basis of most property acquired from or passing from a decendent who dies after December 31, 1976, is to be the same as the decendent's basis immediately before his death (with certain adustments). The aggregate basis of all carryover basis property may be increased to a minimum of $60,000. In addition, a $10,000 exemption is provided for household and personal effects of the decendent. The provision is effective for property passing from decedents dying after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows H.R. 14844 with one modification. Under this modification, the adjusted basis of property which the decendent is treated as holding on December 31, 1976, is increased, for purposes of determining gain (but not loss), by the amount by which the fair market value of property on December 31, 1976, exceeds its adjusted basis on that date. However, the basis cannot be increased above its estate tax value. In essence, this modification continues existing law with respect to appreciation in property accruing before January 1, 1977, and provides everyone with a "fresh start."

The "fresh start" rule is applicable to any property held by the decedent which reflects the basis of that property on December 31, 1976. Thus, property held by the decedent at his death which he acquired in a nontaxable exchange with other property which the decedent held on December 31, 1976, is eligible for the "fresh start" provision. Likewise property acquired by the decedent as a gift or from a trust (see discussion below) qualifies for the "fresh start" treatment if the donor or trustee held the property on December 31, 1976. The Treasury Department is to issue regulations providing rules where the decedent has property which reflects the basis of property held on December 31, 1976, to which the decedent has made capital improvements or other additions to the basis of the property.

In order to avoid the necessity of obtaining an appraisal on all property held on December 31, 1976, the conference agreement contains a provision which requires that all property other than securities for which market quotations are readily available, is to be valued under a special valuation method. The special rule is to be used where the carryover basis property is property whose basis does not reflect the basis of property which, on December 31, 1976, was a marketable bond or security. In general, the special rule determines the adjustment by assuming that any appreciation occurring since the acquisition of the property until the date of the decedent's death occurred at the same rate over the entire time that the decedent is treated as holding the property.

Under the special rule, the amount of the increase in basis is equal to the sum of (1) the amount of all depreciation, amortization, or depletion allowed or allowable with respect to the property during the period the decedent is treated as holding the property prior to January 1, 1977, and (2) the portion of the appreciation on the asset since its purchase that is assumed to have occurred during the period that the decedent is treated as holding the property prior to January 1, 1977.

The appreciation treated as occurring before December 31, 1976, is determined by multiplying the total amount of appreciation over the entire period during which the decedent is treated as holding the property by a ratio. The ratio is determined by dividing the number of days that the property is considered to be held by the decedent before January 1, 1977, by the total number of days that the property is considered to be held by the decedent.

The total amount of appreciation is computed by subtracting from the fair market value of the property on the date of the decedent's death a recomputed basis, which is basically equal to the purchase cost of the property. For purposes of this rule, the fair market value of property on the date of the decedent's death is to be determined under the special valuation rule for farms or other closely held businesses if that rule is elected for estate tax purposes (sec. 2032A), but determined without regard to the alternate valuation rule (sec. 2032).

The special valuation method must be used for all property other than marketable bonds or securities. Thus, the special valuation method must be used even though the executor or beneficiary of the decedent can establish that the fair market value of the property on December 31, 1976, is other than the value determined under the special valuation method.

Where the decedent (or his predecessor) made a substantial improvement to any property, the Treasury Department is to issue regulations under which that substantial improvement is treated as a separate property for purposes of this special rule.

Under the conference agreement, the December 31, 1976, value of marketable bonds or securities must be determined by their market value on December 31, 1976. Marketable bonds or securities are securities which are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, or any city or regional exchange in which quotations appear on a daily basis, including foreign securities listed on a recognized foreign national or regional exchange; securities regularly traded in the national or regional over-the-counter market, for which published quotations are available; securities locally traded for which quotations can readily be obtained from established brokerage firms; and units in a common trust fund. The value of such securities is to be determined using the normal methods of valuation for estate and gift tax purposes.

Where the "fresh start" rule applies, the amount of the increase in basis that is permitted under the "fresh start" rule is not to be reduced even though the property is subject to depreciation, depletion, etc. The Treasury Department is to issue regulations determining the application of the "fresh start" rule where gain from the sale of the property is subject to special rules taxing all or a portion of the gain as ordinary income (sec. 306, 1245, 1250, etc.) and where the property is held by a trust or partnership in which the decedent was a beneficiary or a partner.

Any increase in basis permitted by the "fresh start" rule is made before any other adjustments are made to the property's basis for Federal and State death taxes and minimum basis.

The carryover basis provision is effective for property acquired from, or passing from, a decedent after December 31, 1976.

Generation-Skipping Transfers

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, a gift or estate tax is generally imposed upon the transfer of property by gift or by reason of death. However, the termination of an interest of a beneficiary (who is not the grantor) in a trust, life estate, or similar arrangement is not a taxable event unless the beneficiary under the trust has a general power of appointment with respect to the trust property. H.R. 14844 imposes a tax in the case of generation-skipping transfers under a trust or similar arrangement. An exclusion is provided for transfers to a grandchild of a grantor of the trust to the extent that the total transfers per child of the grantor do not exceed $1 million.

Senate amendment.—The Senate amendment is basically the same as H.R. 14844 except that no exclusion is provided for transfers to a grandchild of the grantor.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the rules of the House bill with respect to technical matters, and the conferees agree with the explanation of these provisions appearing at pages 46–59 of House Report 94–1380 (the Ways and Means Committee Report on H.R. 14844), except as modified in this report. Under the conference agreement, the exclusion for transfers to a grandchild of the grantor is $250,000.

The conference agreement also includes several technical amendments to H.R. 14844.

As under H.R. 14844, the basis of property which is subject to tax as a generation-skipping transfer is to be increased (but not above the value of this property used in determining the amount of the tax) by an amount equal to the tax imposed with respect to the appreciation element in the value of the property (determined as of the applicable valuation date). Property in a generation-skipping trust is also to receive the benefit of the "fresh start" based on a December 31, 1976 valuation date, which is provided, under the conference agreement, for property passing or acquired from a decedent (in connection with the rules under the conference agreement concerning "carryover basis"). Of course, this "fresh start" is only to be available to the extent that property passing through the trust is subject to the tax on generation-skipping transfers and the taxable transfer occurs at or after the death of the deemed transferor. Where these conditions are satisfied, property held in a generation-skipping trust, or by the grantor of a generation-skipping trust, on December 31, 1976, is to receive an adjustment to basis equal to the excess (if any) of the fair market value of the property on that date over the basis of the property in the hands of the trust or its grantor, for purposes of determining gain but not loss. Other issues in this area are to be determined under regulations and, to the extent practicable, the rules with respect to carryover basis in the case of property which is subject to the tax on generation-skipping transfers are to be similar to the rules which apply in the case of other property passing or acquired from a decedent. Of course, the trust is not to be eligible for the $60,000 minimum basis or the $10,000 exclusion for personal or household effects. (Even if these provisions were applicable, they would be fully utilized by the estate of the deemed transferor in almost every case.)

The conference agreement provides that the alternate valuation date is to be available where a taxable termination occurs at the death of the deemed transferor. In this case the election to use the alternate valuation date is to be made by the trustee of the generation-skipping trust (who is also the person liable for the tax under these circumstances) and it is not required that the executor of the deemed transferor's estate also elect the alternate valuation date (since different persons are liable for the tax and the estate and the trust may have a different investment experience during the 6-month period). The trustee is required to make a timely filing of the tax return (including any extensions) in order to receive the alternate valuation date. Each trustee of a trust in which there is a taxable termination may elect the alternate valuation date for the property subject to tax, regardless of whether any trustee of any other trust as to which there is a taxable termination upon the death of the deemed transferor also elects the alternate date. However, where more than one taxable termination occurs in the same trust at the same time, the trustee must select the same valuation date for all the transferred property.

As explained in the Ways and Means Committee Report (p. 50), where two or more members of the same generation have present interests in the same trust, a taxable termination generally does not occur until the last of these interests terminates. Under the conference agreement, the alternate valuation date is also to be available in these circumstances. For example, if a trust is created providing discretionary distribution of income to the grantor's children, A, B, and C, with the remainder to be distributed to the grantor's great-grandchildren, then upon the death of the survivor of A, B, and C, the trustee could elect to use the alternate valuation date (6 months from the death of the survivor) with respect to all of the trust assets.

In addition, the conference agreement modifies the rule on terminations to cover cases where members of several different generations have a present interest or power in the same trust. Under these circumstances, if the interest of the member (or members) of the younger generation terminate first (because of an unusual order of death, or for some other reason, tax is to be postponed until the interest of the older generation also terminates. For example, assume that a discretionary trust is created providing the income for life to the grantor's spouse and his two children, A and B, with the remainder to be distributed to their grandchildren. Under the conference agreement if A and B both predecease the spouse, no taxable termination would occur until the death of the spouse, at which time a taxable termination would occur. (A and B would be the deemed transferors, and the tax base would be determined at the time of the taxable termination, i.e., the death of the spouse.)

These rules concerning postponed terminations apply where two or more persons hold present interests or powers in the trust simultaneously, and also apply where a beneficiary who is a member of the same (or a higher) generation as the beneficiary whose interest has terminated holds a present interest or power in the trust immediately after the termination. For example, assume that the trust provides income for life to the grantor's nephew, subject to a limited power of appointment exercisable by the nephew upon his death, with the principal to be distributed to the nephew's issue. If the nephew exercises the power by providing that the trust income is to be paid to his wife for life, before the distribution of principal to his issue, tax is postponed until the death of the wife. (Of course, only one tax is imposed at that time, the nephew is the deemed transferor, and the tax base is computed as of the date of the death of the nephew's spouse.)

In certain cases, the rule under the conference agreement may cause several taxable terminations to occur at the same time. For example, assume a trust is created for the benefit of the grantor's nephew and his nephew's son for life, with the remainder to be distributed to the nephew's grandson. If the nephew's son dies before the nephew, no tax would be imposed at that time; upon the death of the nephew, however, a tax would be imposed on the termination of the nephew's interest. The amount of this tax would then be deducted from the tax base (the value of the trust assets) and the tax which had been postponed upon the death of the nephew's son would then be imposed. (The reason for deducting the tax imposed on the nephew's interest is to avoid a double tax; the net result under the conference agreement is that the generation-skipping tax will be essentially the same, even where there is an unusual order of death.)

The conference agreement also provides that in connection with the credit for previously taxed property, the value of the property subject to the tax on generation-skipping transfers which is not taken into account for purposes of the estate tax (e.g., the excess over the actuarial value of the deemed transferor's life interest taken into account under present law) is to be taken into account for purposes of the credit allowed for the generation-skipping transfer tax. Minor technical changes are made with respect to the marital deduction, and the deduction for losses and expenses of the trust. The conferees intend that any permitted increase in the amount of the marital deduction by reason of a generation-skipping transfer occurring after the death of the decedent is not to be treated as a terminable interest solely by reason of the fact that the maximum amount of the deduction is not known as of the date of the decedent's death. The conference agreement also provides that, where certain rights to income are subject to the tax on generation-skipping transfers, the income tax treatment of so-called "income in respect of a decedent"' will apply to certain types of income. Thus the recipient of this income (whether the trustee or a beneficiary of the trust) is entitled to a deduction (in computing the income tax on this income) for the generation-skipping tax in the same way as the recipient is allowed a deduction for the estate tax under present law (sec. 691(c)). Also, under the conference agreement, where a generation-skipping transfer which is subject to tax occurs after the death of the deemed transferor, section 303 treatment is to be available. The trust and the actual estate of the deemed transferor are to be treated separately for purposes of the section 303 qualification requirements.

The conference agreement also provides that where the deemed transferor dies within three years after a generation-skipping transfer, the transfer is to be brought back for purposes of the tax on generation-skipping transfers. (This is closely analogous to the estate tax treatment of gifts made within 3 years of the decedent's death under the conference agreement for estate tax purposes.) In other words, the generation-skipping transfer is to be taxed, under these circumstances, at the deemed transferor's transfer tax rate taking amount his cumulative lifetime and deathtime transfers (and not just his adjusted taxable gifts as of the date of the generation-skipping transfer).

The conferees also wish to clarify that for purposes of the new disclaimer rules (sec. 2518), the event which triggers the 9-month period allowed for an effective disclaimer is the generation-skipping transfer (either a taxable termination or a taxable distribution).

Under the conference agreement, returns are to be filed in accordance with regulations. To the extent practicable, the regulations are to provide that the return is to be filed by the trustee in the case of a taxable termination, and by the distributee in the case of a taxable distribution. In the case of a generation-skipping transfer occurring before the death of the deemed transferor (generally a taxable distribution), the return is not due until 90 days after the close of the taxable year of the trust in which the transfer occurs. In the case of a transfer occurring or after the death of the deemed transferor, the return is due at the later of (1) 90 days after the estate tax return of the deemed transferor is due, or (2) 9 months after the generation-skipping transfer occurs. (Rule (2) will generally be used in cases where a taxable termination is postponed because there are several present interests in the same trust.) The Treasury Department is given regulatory authority to require the filing of such information returns as may be needed. The conferees intend that the Service will establish procedures whereby the person required to file a return in connection with any generation-skipping transfer may receive information from the Service concerning the deemed transferor's marginal transfer tax rate base, and other information which is necessary in order to properly prepare the return (or any refund claim).

Under the conference agreement, generation-skipping transfers are generally subject to the procedural rules of Subtitle F which are applicable to gift and estate taxes but, of course, the specific provisions of the conference agreement override this general rule in the area of filing requirements. However, where not inconsistent with the conference agreement, the provisions of Subtitle F apply and the Internal Revenue Service, for example, may grant an extension of up to 6 months for filing any return required with respect to a generation-skipping transfer, where reasonable cause can be shown (sec. 6081), or grant an extension for the payment of the tax (sec. 6161).

The conferees also wish to clarify several additional points.

The conference agreement provides that transfers to the grandchild of the grantor of a trust are not to be treated as taxable transfers except to the extent that the total amount of the transfers exceed $250,000 for each deemed transferor (i.e., the child of the grantor who is the parent of the grandchild receiving the transfer). This exclusion is to be available in any case where the property vests in the grandchild (i.e., the property interests will be taxable in the grandchild's estate) as of the time of the termination or distribution, even where the property continues to be held in trust for the grandchild's benefit, and regardless of whether the grandchild receives his interest under the express terms of the trust, or as the result of the exercise (or lapse) of a power of appointment with respect to the trust.

Under the conference agreement, the Treasury Department is given authority to prescribe "separate share" rules, to determine whether a trust in which there are several interests should be treated as one trust, or as two or more separate trusts. For this purpose, it is expected that the regulations will, to the extent practicable, prescribe rules which are substantially similar to those which apply presently to the income taxation of trusts (under Subchapter J).

Under the conference agreement, where a beneficiary has more than one interest or power in a generation-skipping trust, the imposition of the generation-skipping tax is generally delayed until the termination of the last power or interest of that beneficiary in the trust. For example, where an individual is entitled to receive all of the trust income until the individual dies or reaches age 35 and also has a power commencing at age 35 to withdraw 5 percent of the trust corpus for life, the generation-skipping tax will be imposed at the death of the individual and not when the individual reaches age 35.

However, the amount subject to tax at that time is the cumulative value (not in excess of 100 percent of the value of the trust assets determined as of the time of the termination or the alternate valuation date) subject to these interests and powers. In this case, the individual held a full income interest in the trust until age 35, so the tax base is the value of the trust assets (determined as of the time of the taxable termination, i.e., the individual's death). If the individual had held only a power to withdraw 5 percent of the trust corpus annually (or $5,000, whichever is greater), the tax base equals the value of the trust corpus determined as of the date of the individual's death (i.e., the date of the taxable termination) because the entire trust was "subject to the power." (This is the result regardless of the number of years for which the power was held, exercised, or allowed to lapse, and regardless of the average value of the trust during this period.)[1] Likewise, if the individual were a beneficiary under a power to invade corpus subject to an ascertainable standard relating to his health, education, support or maintenance, the tax is to be the value of the trust corpus (determined as of the date of the termination) because the full trust is subject to the power.

The assignment of a beneficiary's interest in a generation-skipping trust is not to be treated as a taxable termination. For example, assume a trust provided that the income was to be paid to the grantor's nephew for life, with the remainder to be distributed to the nephew's son upon his death. If the nephew assigned his life income interest (with or without receiving consideration), this would not constitute a termination of that interest for purposes of the tax on generation-skipping transfers. However, the death of the nephew would constitute a taxable termination and the tax would be imposed based upon the value of the trust at that time.

[1] The interpretation given to this provision by the example appearing in the first full paragraph on page 54 of the Ways and Means Committee Report is inconsistent with the intent of the conferees. Under the conference agreement, the full value of the trust corpus is to be treated as the tax base. (In the example appearing on page 54, the tax base equals $90,000 plus any appreciation accumulated at the end of the 15-year period, and subject to any adjustments chargeable to corpus.)

In the case of a taxable distribution, the "transferee" for purposes of the tax on generation-skipping transfers is, of course, the person receiving the distribution. In the case of a taxable termination the "transferee" is generally any person who has a present interest or power in the trust or trust property after the termination.[2] For example, assume that a trust is created for the benefit of the grantor's nephew for life, then to the nephew's son for life and, upon the death of the nephew's son, the entire trust is to be distributed to the issue of the nephew's son, per stirpes. Upon the death of the nephew, the nephew's son is the transferee with respect to the entire trust (because he is entitled to all of the trust income). Upon the death of the nephew's son, each of his issue entitled to receive a portion of the trust assets is to be treated as a transferee to the extent of that portion. The same result would follow in the case of a trust which provided that upon the death of the nephew the income was to be distributed, on a discretionary basis, to the nephew's son and the son's issue with the principal to be distributed to the issue of the nephew's son upon the son's death; in this case the nephew's son would be the transferee of the entire trust upon the death of the nephew.[3] Upon the death of the nephew's son, his issue would become the transferees.

The term "transferee" is to be further defined in regulations. The conferees intend that these regulations will prevent situations where attempts are made to minimize tax through the use of nominal transferees.

Under the conference agreement, as under H.R. 14844 (Ways and Means Committee Report, p. 53) there are rules designed to prevent the imposition of a second tax "to the extent that" the value of the property in the trust has already been taxed once to a particular generation. For example, assume that a trust provides income for life to the grantor's nephew, then to the nephew's son for life, then to the grantor's niece for life and upon her death the principal is to be distributed to her daughter. Assume that all of these transfers in fact occur, and that upon the death of the nephew the value of the trust assets subject to tax is $100,000; upon the death of the niece the value of the trust assets is $200,000. Under the conference agreement, only $100,000 is to be subject to tax upon the death of the niece, because $100,000 of value was previously subject to generation-skipping tax upon the death of the nephew.

Also, under the conference agreement, these rules preventing the imposition of a second tax (where there are two or more deemed transfers of the same trust property attributable to the same generation) are not to be applied where this would have the effect of avoiding the tax with respect to any other transfer.

The conference agreement generally follows the rule of the Senate bill with respect to the effective dates with certain modifications. Thus, the tax does not apply in the case of transfers under irrevocable trusts in existence on April 30, 1976, or in the case of decedents dying before January 1, 1982, pursuant to a will (or revocable trust) which was in existence on April 30, 1976, and which was not amended (except in respects which do not result in the creation of, or increase the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer) at any time after that date. The 1982 date is extended in certain cases where the testator is incompetent to change his will.

For purposes of this transitional rule, a change of trustee is not a change creating or increasing the amount of a generation-skipping transfer. Also, an amendment changing the beneficiaries, or a change in the size of the share used for the benefit of a particular beneficiary, does not disqualify the trust under the transition rule, so long as the number of younger generations provided for under the trust (or the potential duration of the trust in terms of younger generation beneficiaries) is not expanded and the total value of the interests of all beneficiaries in each generation below the grantor's generation is not increased. For example, assume a revocable trust was created prior to April 30, 1976, for the benefit of the grantor's nephews. A, B, and C, in equal shares for life, with the remainder to be distributed to the children of A, B, and C. A becomes disabled and the trust is modified to increase his share of the income; this does not disqualify the trust because it does not create or increase the amount of a generation-skipping transfer. Likewise, if the trust is amended to include nephew D as an income beneficiary, this would not disqualify the trust under the transition rules. However, if the trust were amended so that the income was to be held in trust for the lives of the children of A, B, and C, with the remainder distributed to the nephews' grandchildren, this would increase generation-skipping (by increasing the number of generations skipped) and would disqualify the trust. An amendment creating a power of appointment would also disqualify the trust if there were any possibility, under the power of appointment, of increasing the number of generations which might be skipped.

In some cases, a trust which is irrevocable on April 30, 1976, might also be subject to a power of appointment under which it might be possible for the property to continue to be held in trust for the benefit of new beneficiaries, some of whom might be members of the generation younger than any beneficiaries expressly covered under the trust prior to the exercise of the power. Under the conference agreement the grandfather provision will apply to such a trust which includes a limited power of appointment, so long as the exercise of the power (including the creation of a new trust) cannot result in the creation of an interest which postpones, or a new power which can be validly exercised so as to postpone, the vesting of any estate or interest in the trust property for a period ascertainable without regard to the date of the creation of the trust.

Redemption of Stock to Pay Estate Tax

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, stock in a closely held corporation that is redeemed within 4 years of the decedent's death is taxed as capital gain rather than as dividend income. To qualify, the value of the decedent's stock in the closely held business must be either 35 percent of the gross estate or 50 percent of the taxable estate. The value of the redeemed stock qualifying for this treatment cannot exceed the sum of all death taxes plus funeral and administration expenses.

H.R. 14844, requires that, in order to qualify for capital gains treatment, the value of the decedent's stock of the closely held corporation must exceed 65 percent of the value of the adjusted gross estate. The stock that can qualify for capital gains treatment is limited to stock which is redeemed from a shareholder whose interest in the estate is reduced (either directly or through a binding obligation to contribute) by the payment of the death taxes and funeral and administration expenses. In addition. H.R. 14844 extends the time for redemption to 15 years in cases where an election has been made for the deferred payment of taxes.

This provision applies to decedents dying after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows H.R. 14844, except that the 65-percent limit is reduced to 50 percent.

Orphans' Exclusion

H.R. 14844.—There is no provision under present law which allows an estate tax deduction for the value of any interest in property which passes or has passed from a decedent to an orphaned child.

H.R. 14844 provides an estate tax deduction for amounts which pass to a child of the decedent if the child is under 21 years of age and there is no surviving spouse (or known surviving parent) of the decedent. The maximum deduction under this provision is $5,000 for each year the child is under age 21. This provision applies to estate of decedents dying after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Requirement That IRS Furnish a Statement Explaining Estate or Gift Valuation

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the IRS can require that the executor submit a copy of any appraisals he has obtained in determining the value of property included in the decedent's gross estate. However, there is no administrative provision which provides an affirmative requirement on the part of the IRS to disclose the method or basis used by the IRS in arriving at its determination of value.

H.R. 14844 provides that if the IRS makes a determination of the value of any item of property for purposes of the estate or gift tax laws or the generation-skipping tax, the executor or donor may request that the IRS furnish a written statement explaining the basis on which the valuation was determined. This provision applies to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976, and gifts and generation-skipping transfers occurring after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

[2] Generally the person would receive his present interest immediately after the taxable termination. However, in certain cases, there might be an intervening interest in a person (i.e., a charity) which is not a transferee (sec. 2611(c)(7)). In this case, the transferee is the person having the next succeeding interest. (In the example which appears in the text, the nephew's son would be the transferee upon the death of the nephew, even if the trust provided that the income was to be paid to charity for 10 years after the date of the nephew's death. Of course, if the nephew's son died before the expiration of the 10-year intervening interest, no taxable termination would occur upon his death under the conference agreement because the nephew's son would never have held anything other than a "future interest" in the trust (sec. 2613(b)(1)).)

[3] The nephew's son has an income interest in the entire trust, he represents the oldest generation then having a present interest or power and, for purposes of determining who is a transferee, it is presumed under the conference agreement that any discretion with respect to the trust will be exercised per stirpes (sec. 2613(b)(3)).

Gift Tax Returns

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, gift tax returns generally must be filed for each calendar quarter in which a donor transfers by gift an amount in excess of the annual $3,000 exclusion per donee.

H.R. 14844 provides that a gift tax must be filed on a quarterly basis only when the sum of (1) taxable gifts made during the calendar quarter plus (2) all other taxable gifts made during the calendar year for which a return has not been filed, exceeds $25,000. This provision applies to gifts made after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Public Index of Filed Tax Liens

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, a Federal tax lien generally takes priority over other interests in property subject to the lien which are held by purchasers, holders of security interests and certain other persons if notice of the tax lien has been appropriately filed before such interests were acquired.

H.R. 14844 provides that a Federal tax lien is not effective over other interests unless the fact of filing is entered and recorded on a public index at the place of filing in such a manner that a reasonable inspection would disclose the existence of the lien. This provision is effective on the 90th day after enactment in the case of notices filed on or after the date of enactment. The provision is effective on the 180th day after enactment in the case of liens filed before the date of enactment.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement provides that a notice of a lien is not to be treated as meeting the filing requirements unless a public index of the lien is maintained at the district Internal Revenue Service office in which the property subject to the lien is situated. For this purpose, an index of liens affecting real property would be maintained in the district office for the area in which the real property is physically located. In the case of liens affecting personal property, the index would be maintained in the district office for the area in which the residence of the taxpayer is located at the time the notice of lien is filed.

The conferees understand that the Internal Revenue Service also will use its best efforts to make follow-up checks on the recordation or indexing of notices of lien which are filed after date of enactment with offices designated under local law as the place for filing notices of lien.

The conference agreement is effective on the 120th day after enactment in the case of notices filed on or after the date of enactment. In the case of liens filed before the date of enactment, the conference agreement is effective on the 270th day after enactment.

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, an inter vivos transfer made by the decedent is included in his gross estate if he retained for his lifetime either the right to possess or enjoy the property or the right to designate the person who will possess or enjoy the property. In U.S. v. Byrum, the U.S. Supreme Court held that the retention of the power to vote stock in a closely held corporation did not require the stock to be included in the decedent's gross estate.

H.R. 14844 requires the inclusion of stock in the gross estate of the decedent if the decedent retained the voting rights in the stock. This provision also applies to transfers made after June 22, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Disclaimers

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, there are several estate and gift tax provisions which provide rules governing the tax consequences of an effective disclaimer. However, the provisions do not contain uniform rules on what constitutes an effective disclaimer for estate and gift tax purposes.

H.R. 14844 provides a single set of definitive rules for disclaimers for purposes of estate, gift, and generation-skipping transfer taxes. This provision generally applies to transfers creating an interest in the person disclaiming made after December 31, 1976.

The conferees intend to make it clear that the 9-month period for making a disclaimer is to be determined in reference to each taxable transfer. For example, in the case of a general power of appointment where the other requirements are satisfied, the person who would be the holder of the power will have a 9-month period after the creation of the power in which to disclaim and the person to whom the property would pass by reason of the exercise or lapse of the power would have a 9-month period after a taxable exercise, etc., by the holder of the power in which to disclaim. Similarly, in the case where a lifetime transfer is included in the transferor's gross estate because he had retained an interest in the property (e.g. sec. 2038), the person who would receive an interest in the property during the lifetime of the grantor will have a 9-month period after the original transfer in which to disclaim and a person who would receive an interest in the property on or after the grantor's death would have a 9-month period after the grantor's death in which to disclaim if the other requirements of the provision are satisfied (e.g., that person had not accepted the interest or any of the benefits attributable to the interest before making the disclaimer).

Estate and Gift Tax Exclusions for Qualified Retirement Benefits

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, the value of a survivor's interest in an annuity purchased by the decedent is included in the decedent's gross estate. However, an exclusion for estate and gift tax purposes is provided for the value of the portion of a survivor's annuity attributable to employer contributions to a qualified retirement plan.

H.R. 14844 excludes from the gross estate a survivor's interest in an H.R. 10 plan and an individual retirement account. This bill removes the exclusion for all lump-sum distributions of the survivor's interest. This provision applies to decedents dying and gifts made after December 31, 1976.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

The conference agreement modifies the provisions of H.R. 14844 to make it clear that a distribution from an individual retirement account to a beneficiary does not have to be in the form of a typical commercial annuity contract to qualify for the exclusion. Generally, the exclusion is to be available in situations where a liquidity problem might exist because the schedule of payments to be made from the account will not provide current funds to pay the estate tax. Under the conference agreement, the exclusion will be available if the distribution from an individual retirement account to the beneficiary consists of an annuity contract or other arrangement providing for a series of substantially equal periodic payments to be made to a beneficiary (other than the executor) for his life or over a period extending for at least 36 months after the date of the decedent's death. For this purpose, payments under an annuity contract are to be considered to be "substantially equal" under a variable annuity if the variance in payments are not solely attributable to tax avoidance motives. Of course, the annuity or other arrangement need not provide payments for the life of the beneficiary. Generally, satisfaction of the 3-year payment standard will be based on the payment provisions of the account or the settlement options, if any, elected no later than the earlier of the date the estate tax return is filed or the date on which the return is required to be filed (including extensions of time to file).

Gift Tax Treatment of Certain Community Property

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, in community property States, no portion of a survivor annuity in a qualified plan attributable to employer contributions is includible in the gross estate of the employee's spouse if the spouse predeceased the employee. However, for gift tax purposes, if an employee predeceases his spouse in a community property State, the surviving spouse is treated as having made a gift of one-half of any benefits payable to other beneficiaries.

H.R. 14844 provides a gift tax exclusion (similar to the existing estate tax exclusion) for the value, to the extent attributable to employer contributions, of any interest of an employee's spouse in a specified annuity contract, or retirement plan payments. This provision is effective for calendar quarters beginning after December 31, 1976.

Income Tax Treatment of Certain Selling Expenses of Estates and Trusts

H.R. 14844.—Under present law, an estate or trust is not permitted to deduct any item for income tax purposes if that same item is deducted for estate tax purposes. However, a number of courts have held that items which reduce the sales price, such as selling expenses, can be deducted for estate tax purposes as well as reduce the sales price for income tax purposes.

H.R. 14844 provides that an item may not be used to offset the sales price for income tax purposes if the same item is deducted for estate tax purposes. This provision applies to taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

Senate amendment.—No provision.

Estate Tax Credit for Payment In Kind

H.R. 14844.—No provision.

Senate amendment.—Under present law, in addition to legal tender, it is lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to accept checks or money orders in payment of tax liability. There is no provision authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept other forms of payment, such as the conveyance of real property.

The Senate amendment allows the Secretary of the Treasury to accept conveyance of real property located within the boundaries of the Toiyable National Forest as payment of estate tax imposed on the estate of LaVere Redfield. This provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment but provides that interest will accrue if the property is not conveyed expeditiously.

[1] This table has omitted Title XIX—Repeal and Revision of Obsolete, Rarely Used, Etc., Provisions.

[2] Less than $5 million.

[3] The revenue impact of this provision cannot be estimated until the Internal Revenue Service determines the deduction level.

[4] The revenue impact of this provision cannot be estimated until the Bureau of Labor Statistics determines the deduction level.

[5] The revenue impact of this provision will not be very great; its magnitude, however, is not determinable because of lack of information regarding the practices of the state legislators during the period covered by the provision.

[7] It is estimated that this provision will decrease budget receipts by $65,000,000 in the aggregate over the next 5 fiscal years.

[8] This provision has been enacted into law; the estimates, therefore, are not included in the total for Title XV.

[9] The LERA provision of the House bill was not adopted by the Senate Finance Committee however, a provision was adopted which would permit a participant in a Government plan to make deductible IRA contributions if the LERA provision should be adopted.

[10] From 10% to 12%.

[11] House provisions on energy are contained in House-passed H.R. 6860. The conference agreement omits the provisions in the Senate amendment as the Finance Committee has reported the Senate amendment in separate House-passed bill (H.R. 6860). The section numbers shown under this title are those under Title XX of the Senate version of the bill.

[12] There is also an estimated $2,000,000 decrease in budget receipts for fiscal year 1976 under this provision.

[13] While the House version of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 does not include estate and gift tax provisions, the Estate and Gift Tax Reform Act of 1976 as reported by the Ways and Means Committee is estimated to reduce fiscal year receipts as follows: 1977, $15 million; 1978, $616 million; 1979, $805 million; 1980, $982 million; and 1981, $917 million.

[14] This reflects the House passed version of H.R. 10612 after eliminating the effect of the Revenue Adjustment Act of 1975.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 10339, FARMER-TO-CONSUMER DIRECT MARKETING ACT OF 1975

Mr. VIGORITO submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 10339) to encourage the direct marketing of agricultural commodities from farmers to consumers:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 94-1516)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 10339) to encourage the direct marketing of agricultural commodities from farmers to consumers, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 1, lines 4 and 5 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "September 30, 1978, and September 30, 1979" and insert in lieu thereof and September 30, 1978.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

EMERGENCY HAY PROGRAM

SEC. 8. In carrying out any emergency hay program for farmers or ranchers in any area of the United States under section 305 of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974 because of an emergency or major disaster in such area, the President shall direct the Secretary of Agriculture to pay 80 percent of the cost of transporting hay (not to exceed $50 per ton) from areas in which hay is in plentiful supply to the area in which such farmers or ranchers are located. The provisions of this section shall expire on October 1, 1977.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 10339) to encourage the direct marketing of agricultural commodities from farmers to consumers, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

(1) Short title (Amdt. No. 1)

The Senate amendment amends the short title of the House bill to reflect the present calendar year.

The Committee of Conference adopted the Senate amendment.

(2) Authorization of appropriations (Amdt. No. 2)

The House bill authorizes appropriations for technical assistance in implementing the direct marketing program for only the 1977 fiscal year.

The Commitee of Conference agreed to an authorization of appropriations through the 1978 fiscal year.

(3) Emergency hay program (Amdt. No. 3)

The Senate amendment adds a new section which requires the President—in carrying out any emergency hay program under section 305 of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974—to direct the Secretary of Agriculture, at the option of the farmers and ranchers, to either—

(a) purchase hay in areas where it is plentiful, transport it into the area where the farmers or ranchers are located, and sell it to them at no more than $40 a ton; or

(b) pay the costs of transporting a farmer's or rancher's cattle from the emergency area to a location where adequate grazing land is available and then back to the stricken area within a reasonable time after grazing conditions there have improved sufficiently to support the cattle. No farmer or rancher would be prohibited from selling or otherwise disposing of livestock after they have been transported outside the emergency area; however, if he does so, no return transportation payment will be made.

The new section added by the Senate amendment also provides that—

(i) hay is to be made available under section 305 of the Disaster Relief Act to help farmers and ranchers maintain their cattle herds during any period such assistance is needed as the result of an emergency or major disaster (as those terms are defined in section 102 of the Disaster Relief Act. Prior to a determination by the President that such a situation exists, a request must be made by the Governor of the affected State);

(ii) a farmer or rancher may purchase hay under the program sufficient to permit the maintenance of up to 180 days' supply. However, the quantity of hay sold under the program may not exceed 40 pounds a cow per day in the case of dairy cows; 20 pounds a cow per day in the case of replacement heifers; and 20 pounds a head per day in the case of beef cattle; and

(iii) the Secretary may utilize the facilities of the Commodity Credit Corporation in carrying out any emergency livestock feed program under section 305 of the Disaster Relief Act.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, the Committee of Conference agreed to a provision requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to pay 80 percent of the cost of transporting hay (not to exceed $50 per ton) from areas in which hay is in plentiful supply to disaster or emergency areas where farmers or ranchers are located. The new section will expire on October 1, 1977. Under the present hay transportation assistance program being conducted under section 305 of this Disaster Relief Act, the Government is providing up to two-thirds of the actual cost to transport hay (not to exceed $27 per ton) to drought-affected areas in Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin. Except for the increase in the transportation assistance, the new section of the bill does not affect the existing program.

A REORGANIZATION OF THE INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY AND A PERMANENT HOUSE INTELLIGENCE COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LLOYD of California). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MCCLORY) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MCCLORY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing two pieces of legislation which incorporate portions of the product of my work in the House Select Committee on Intelligence. The long hours of hard work by the committee members on both sides of the aisle should not be recalled as a fruitless exercise which will be forgotten simply because a member of the news media obtained an unauthorized copy of the select committee's final report.

I supported the establishment of the select committee pursuant to House Resolution 138 in February 1975. In fact, I do not believe that the committee could have carried out its mandate or would have been reestablished in July 1975, had it not been for the bipartisan work of myself and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BOLLING). The select committee was reconstituted by House Resolution 591, and the investigation went forward. Initially, we progressed rapidly in a spirit of cooperation. In total, over 77,000 classified documents—approximately 90 lineal feet—of classified material was received from the CIA alone. I advocated and fully supported receiving all the classified material which the select committee requested.

When the flow of information from the intelligence agencies to the select committee reached an impasse, I personally delivered to the President a memorandum in which I urged that the committee's subpenas, which were past the return date, should be complied with. Thereafter, joined by a few distinguished Members of the House—the Speaker, the minority leader (Mr. RHODES), and the chairman of the select committee (Mr. PIKE), I went to the Oval Office on September 26, 1975, and urged the President, the Vice President, Dr. Kissinger, and Mr. Colby to instruct the various intelligence agencies to supply the select committee with the secret and other classified information which we needed in order to carry out the mandate given to it by the House in House Resolution 591. I do not believe the select committee would have received the information if it had not been for the efforts of myself and the others who went to the President and promised to institute procedures for protection of the classified materials.

The agreement we made with the President, which was adopted by a majority vote of the select committee on October 1, 1975, provided that the select committee would receive classified material pursuant to a promise that it would remain confidential unless the committee determined by majority vote that the information should be released to the public. Furthermore, the agreement provided that the intelligence agencies would be afforded the opportunity to explain to the committee the reasons they believed the material should remain classified. If there were disagreements between the intelligence agencies and the select committee, the President himself could indicate that he saw no harm by the release of the information, or in the alternative certify that the release could jeopardize the national security. If the committee disagreed with the President's determination, we could go to court to resolve the differences between the two branches of the Government.

Until we began to consider the final report, this solemn procedure was respected by the committee and by the executive branch. In four instances the committee voted to release brief synopses of particular intelligence projects which the intelligence agencies felt would be harmful to our national security. The President exercised his judgment, pursuant to the provisions of our agreement, and after careful study, determined that these reports could be dangerous to the security of the Nation. The committee adhered to the President's determination, complied with the provisions of the agreement, and withheld the classified information. However, with respect to the publication and filing of the final report, some of the members of the committee felt the agreement with the President was inapplicable. Eventually, the House, by a vote of 246 to 124, decided to respect to agreement with the executive branch and, thus, fulfill our solemn promise to the President.

The Congress of the United States and, particularly, the committees of the House and Senate charged with the responsibility of overseeing the intelligence activities of this country should be able to receive and safeguard highly sensitive and classified information. However, before this can be accomplished, mutual trust and appropriate mechanisms for conveyance must be established. The President and the intelligence agencies exhibited its trust in this select committee and the Congress by delivering numerous classified documents to the select committee during its investigation. To assume, however, that the receipt of this vast volume of material from the intelligence agencies gave the select committee or the House of Representatives a license to release or publish the information was inconsistent with the terms under which the material was received.

As the ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Intelligence, I did not agree with all of the positions advocated by the majority of the committee. I did, however, fully support the subpenas issued by the select committee, and I protested when the information was not delivered punctually or the subpenas were not fully complied with. Our committee was successful in receiving this necessary information, but it was never my view that this committee or the Congress has the unilateral right to release to the public the highly classified and sensitive information which we received from the intelligence agencies. My dissenting views on this and other actions of the committee are outlined in my additional views to the final report; which, like the remainder of the report, are in the custody of the clerk of the House. However, the portion of the report entitled "Recommendations of the Final Report of the Select Committee on Intelligence (H. Rept. 94-833)" contained no classified information and was published. Some of these recommendations are unworkable, and, quite frankly, not well thought out. But, if implemented, many could offer a significant improvement for the efficient operation of the intelligence community.

INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1976

After a period of reflection on the series of missteps and errors committed by the select committee, I have decided that some of the conclusions drawn from evidence compiled during the vigorous investigation should not be allowed to lie dormant with the impounded report. Therefore, I have prepared the Intelligence Community Reorganization Act of 1976, which incorporates several of my recommendations to the House. The recommendations in this bill are based on a careful study of the evidence derived during the course of this investigation. Some of the changes are long overdue. Some will probably be opposed by the intelligence community, but the overriding conclusion based on the evidence gathered by the select committee makes it clear that the community would be more efficient and better prepared to carry out its vital role throughout the world if these changes were adopted.

Several of the major changes are highlighted hereinafter. First, the National Security Agency shall be removed from the auspices of the Defense Department. The agency would be reestablished as an independent agency in the executive branch. All functions and records would be transferred to this independent agency, but the Director, who would be subject to Senate confirmation, could hold no other civil or military office. This would not preclude active duty military personnel from serving in the Agency, but it does insure that the Director will be independent from the Pentagon and subject to Senate confirmation.

Second, the bill creates a new position which shall be known as the Director of Central Intelligence. The Director will be the chief foreign intelligence officer of the United States and will supervise and control all foreign intelligence agencies. The Director will not carry out the function of supervising day-to-day operations of the CIA, but will be responsible for coordinating CIA activities with other foreign intelligence operations. In addition, he will appoint an Inspector General for all intelligence activities to insure effective internal oversight.

The Director of Central Intelligence will be required to inform the appropriate Committees of Congress of the extent, purpose, and risks of any covert action involving a significant risk within 48 hours of initiation of the project. The Director must report annually to the Congress on efforts to eliminate duplication and shall investigate any and all intelligence failures and report the findings to the Congress.

Third, the Defense Intelligence Agency will be abolished and all functions shall be transferred to the control of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Intelligence. Originally established in 1961 pursuant to Department of Defense Directive 5105.21, the Defense Intelligence Agency—DIA—was supposed to help coordinate military intelligence among the respective services. During the course of the investigation by the Select Committee, we learned that the opposite result is, in fact, the case. The DIA has proved to be duplicative and wasteful. Rather than coordinating the product of intelligence gathered by the branches, the agency pursues its own mission and exists as an encumbrance to effective analysis and coordination.

Fourth, the audit authority of both the CIA's internal audit staff and the GAO is clearly defined. The CIA internal audit staff is authorized access to all financial records of the Agency, and must audit each overseas station, proprietary and procurement mechanism at least annually. The GAO will have the power to conduct full and complete financial audits of all agencies and departments engaged in foreign intelligence operations.

Finally, the bill grants any committees of the Congress with jurisdiction over intelligence matters the authority to enforce subpenas in the appropriate U.S. district court. Jurisdiction to enforce compliance with such subpenas by the district courts is also established in the bill.

PERMANENT HOUSE COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

The second piece of legislation I am introducing today is a House resolution to establish a permanent House Committee on Intelligence and to regulate and control the release of information from the new committee.

The committee shall consist of 13 members who shall be appointed by committee chairmen from various standing House committees, as outlined in the resolution. This selection process will insure a cross section of members with various expertise on matters relating to intelligence. No member may serve on the committee during more than three Congresses and employees will be limited to a similar 6-year term of service. Finally, the committee will have oversight and legislative jurisdiction with respect to all agencies and departments engaged in foreign intelligence operations.

Release of information from the committee will be prohibited unless strict procedures are followed. The committee must consult with the head of the department or agency of the United States which has classified any material within the possession or control of the committee before such material—including transcripts or minutes of the committee relating thereto—may be released to the public. After such consultation, the committee may, by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members, transmit to the President the material proposed to be released. If, within 15 calendar days after receipt of such material, the President certifies, in writing, that disclosure would be detrimental to the national security of the United States, the material shall not be disclosed, except pursuant to an order of an appropriate district court of the United States. If the President does not so certify within such 15-day period, then the committee may release such material.

Employees of the committee will be prohibited from release of any information and will be required to have appropriate security clearances.

It is particularly important, in light of the hearings currently being conducted by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct on the unauthorized release of the final report of the Select Committee on Intelligence, that the House of Representatives carefully weigh the importance of establishing a new committee. Of course, we will never be able to insure that a similar incident will not again occur. But, with a carefully selected membership and staff, the procedures established pursuant to this resolution will severely limit the likelihood of an unauthorized release.

It is the responsibility of the House to assure that the activities of the intelligence agencies of the United States conform with our laws and the Constitution. It is time for the House to act in order to insure that there is vigilant oversight of all U.S. intelligence activities.

SEC. 2. NSA AS INDEPENDENT AGENCY

This section gives the National Security Agency (NSA) a statutory basis. As thus constituted, it would be an independent agency within the executive branch. The head of the agency, who would be appointed by the President, subject to Senate confirmation, is barred from holding any other civil or military office. The functions of the present agency of the same name—created by Presidential directive in 1952 as a separately organized agency within the Department of Defense—together with its records, are to be transferred to its statutory successor.

SEC. 3. PROHIBITION OF FUND TRANSFERS

The bill's third section amends various provisions of existing law which generally delegate to the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) greater discretion in regards to transferring funds and expending appropriations than is normally enjoyed by other Government agencies. Specifically subsection (a) would repeal section 5 (sic) [1] (a) and (b) of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 403 f) and redesignate the unaffected portions, namely, paragraphs (c), (d), and (e), as (1), (2), and (3), respectively. Paragraph (a) of the existing law which would be repealed by the bill authorizes the CIA to transfer to and receive from other Government agencies (and vice versa) such funds by the Bureau of the Budget (now the Office of Management and Budget (OMB)) for the performance of its prescribed powers and duties and the functioning of its advisory committees (50 U.S.C. 403, 405) regardless of statutory limitations otherwise applicable thereto.

Paragraph (b) of the present law which also would be repealed permits the CIA to exchange funds without regard to 31 U.S.C. 543. The latter generally prohibits disbursing and other government officers from making such exchanges.

Section 3(b) of the bill would modify the provisions of existing law (50 U.S.C. 403j (a)) which allow the CIA to expend funds derived from "appropriations or otherwise" "for purposes necessary to carry out its functions" "notwithstanding any other provisions of law." Also repealed would be that Agency's present authority to expend funds "without regard to the provisions of law and regulations" and to account for expeditures for "objects of a confidential, extraordinary, or emergency nature" "solely" on the certificate of the director.

SECTION 4. DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE

This section reconstitutes the office of the Director, outlines his roles, imposes various specific requirements and limitations, and makes a number of necessary conforming changes in existing law. Subsection (a) would continue the existing law (50 U.S.C. 403) which rests appointment of a Director of Central Intelligence (sic) [2] in the President, subject to Senate confirmation. The Director would be the Nation's Chief foreign intelligence officer and "as such" would be required to supervise and control all U.S. agencies engaged in foreign intelligence. However, it is expressly provided that he would be separate from any operating or analytic intelligence agency (¶ 1).

The Director could not hold "any" other office, civil or military, under the United States. (¶ 2).

The Director would be required to appoint an Inspector General and establish an Office of Inspector General for all U.S. foreign intelligence activities, civil and military. (¶ 3). The Director also would appoint all staff necessary to carry out the functions of the Office of Inspector General as well as the functions of his own office. (¶ 4).

The Director would be authorized to delegate his functions and those of the Office of Inspector General. (¶ 5).

The Director would be responsible for preparing the budget for all U.S. foreign intelligence activities. (¶ 6).

The Director would be charged with coordinating foreign intelligence activities among the various operating and analytic agencies, eliminating duplication, and making an annual report to the Congress with respect to these activities. (¶ 7).

Within 48 hours after initiating "any" covert action involving a "significant risk," the Director would be required to submit a written report to the appropriate Congressional committees, outlining in detail "the nature, extent, purpose, risk, and costs of such actions." (¶ 8).

Finally, the Director would be required to make a "comprehensive" investigation of "every" intelligence failure and report to the Congress the "causes" thereof. The Director would be allowed one year (from commencement to completion) to finish the required report. (¶ 9).

Section 4 (b), (c), (d) and (e) proposed conforming changes to existing law which are required by the foregoing requirements. Subsection (b) would amend section 101 of the National Security Act of 1947. (50 U.S.C. 402) to make the Director of Central Intelligence (sic) [3] a number of the National Security Council. Subsection (C) would amend section 102 of the 1947 Act (50 U.S.C. 403) to change the designation of the Director and Deputy Director of Central Intelligence to Director and Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency as appropriate. Subsection (d) [4] makes a similar change with respect to the Director's designation in the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949. 50 U.S.C. 403 (a) et seq. Subsection (e) would place the post of Director in level II of the Executive Schedule which presently calls for an annual salary of $44,000. See E. O. 11833, 40 F.R. 47091 (1975).

SEC. 5. INTERNAL FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT

This section would give the Agency's internal audit staff access to "all" financial records of the Agency, and empower it to audit "each" overseas station, "each" proprietary activity and "each" procurement mechanism "at least" once a year.

SEC. 6. FULL DISCLOSURE TO CONGRESS

This section would amend section 102(d) (3) (50 U.S.C. 403(d) (3)) so as to make it clear that the injunction against the Director's making unauthorized disclosures does not prevent the disclosure of "any" information to the Congress or "any" instrumentality of the Congress which lawfully demands it.

SEC. 7. DEFENSE INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

Section 7 of the bill would abolish the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA) and transfer its functions to the Assistant Secretary of Intelligence and Director of the Central Intelligence Agency. The latter are enjoined from delegating these functions except to entities under the direct supervision of the Assistant Secretary.

The DIA was established as an agency of the Department of Defense by DOD Directive 5105.21, dated August 1, 1961. DIA, under provisions of the National Security Act of 1947, as amended, operates under the direction, authority, and control of the Secretary of Defense. The chain of command runs from the Secretary of Defense, through the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Director.

Under its Director DIA is responsible for producing and disseminating defense intelligence to satisfy the intelligence requirements of the Secretary of Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and major components of the Defense Department. It accomplishes this either by use of internal resources; through the management, control and coordination of the intelligency functions of other Defense Department activities; or through cooperation with other intelligence organizations.

SEC. 8. RESTRICTION OF POLICE TRAINING

This section would add a new provision to Chapter 93 of the Federal Criminal Code (18 U.S.C.) to generally prohibit police training by certain intelligence officers. This section would subject to a maximum imprisonment of 5 years, or a maximum fine of $10,000, "or both," any person who, while engaged in the duties of an agency of the United States which is principally occupied in foreign intelligence, participates directly or indirectly in the training or supplying of a policy agency [Federal, State or non-foreign public entity].

The caption line of the proposed new penal provision would be included in the table at the beginning of Chapter 93.

SEC. 9. PROHIBITION OF ASSASSINATIONS

This section would make it a crime to perpetrate certain homicides by a person who is engaged in intelligence operations. The penal sanction proposed by section 9 would make it a federal crime, "except in time of war," for any person who is engaged in the duties of an intelligence operation of the Government of the United States, to willfully kill any person. Violation of this section would be punished by imprisonment of at least 1 year.

The caption line of the proposed new crime would be included in the table at the beginning of Chapter 45 of the Federal Criminal Code. (18 U.S.C.).

SEC. 10. G.A.O. BUDGET AUTHORITY

This section would define the General Accounting Office's (G.A.O.) audit authority with respect to U.S. foreign intelligence operations. As such, the G.A.O. would be limited to the making of "full and complete" financial audits.

SEC. 11. COMMITTEE SUBPOENA POWER

This section would provide that any subpoena issued under the authority of either House of Congress by one of its committees having intelligence jurisdiction to any person involved in U.S. intelligence operations may be enforced in the appropriate Federal district court by such committees acting through its counsel. The district courts would have jurisdiction to compel compliance with the subpoena and to punish disobedience as contempt of court.

In addition I am attaching the following section-by-section analysis of a proposed resolution to amend the rules of the House of Representatives to establish a Committee on Intelligence.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF A PROPOSED RESOLUTION TO AMEND THE RULES OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES TO ESTABLISH A COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

The first section of the proposed resolution "resolve[s]" the clause[1] of Rule X of the House Rules relating to establishment and jurisdiction of standing committees of the House be amended in order to establish a Committee on Intelligence. Paragraphs (j) through (v) would be redesignated paragraphs (k) through (w). The purpose of this redesignation is to permit insertion of the proposed Committee on Intelligence in proper alphabetical arrangement as paragraph (j).

New paragraph (j)(1) established a "five" (sic)[1] Member Committee to be drawn as follows"

(A) two Members who are members of the Committee on Appropriations;

(B) two Members who are members of the Committee on Armed Services;

(C) two Members who are members of the Committee on International Relations;

(D) two Members who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary;

(E) two Members who are members of the Committee on Government Operations; and

The Members whose eligibility for service on the new Committee derives from their service on the specified committees are to be appointed by the chairman of each of the latter committees. In making these appointments, the Chairman concerned shall select one member who belongs to the majority party and one member who belongs to the minority party. The latter are to be appointed upon the recommendation of the ranking minority member of each such committee. The three Members who are drawn because of their service on committees other than those specifically enumerated are to be appointed by the Speaker who in appointing the one required minority party member shall do so in accordance with the recommendation of the minority leader (¶(j)(2)(A))

The majority and minority leaders of the House would be ex officio members of the proposed Committee on Intelligence. As such, they have no vote in the Committee and they would not be counted for purposes of a quorum. (¶(j)(2)(B))

The proposed Committee's initial chairman is to be designated by the Speaker. (¶(j)(2)(C))

Except for any service on the proposed Committee on Intelligence during the 94th Congress, no one could be a Member of that Committee during more than three Congresses. The term of service on the proposed Committee would be staggered "to the greatest extent practicable" commencing with each Congress after the 95th Congress. Within this general requirement and after the specified time, one-third of the membership of the Committee is to consist of the Members without any prior service thereon. (¶(j)(2)(D))

The proposed Committee on Intelligence is to have jurisdiction over "all" proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, "and other matters" relating to—

(A) The Central Intelligence Agency and the Director of Central Intelligence.[2]

(B) Intelligence activities of "all" other departments and agencies of the Government, "including but limited to," the intelligence activities of the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Security Agency, and "other" agencies of the Departments of Defense, State, and Treasury.

(C) The organization or reorganization of any department or agency of the Government to the extent that the organization or reorganization relates to a function or activity involving the intelligence activities.

(D) Authorizations for appropriations, "both direct and indirect," for the following:

(i) The Central Intelligence Agency and the Director of Central Intelligence.[3]

(ii) The Defense Intelligence Agency.

(iii) The National Security Agency.

(iv) The intelligence activities of "other" agencies and subdivisions of the Department of Defense.

(v) The intelligence activities of the Department of State.

(vi) "Any" department, agency, or subdivision which is the successor to the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, or the National Security Agency; and the activities of "any" department, agency, or subdivision which is the successor to "any" department, agency, bureau, or subdivision of the intelligence activities of the Department of Defense or the State Department to the extent that the activities of such successor department, agency, or subdivision are activities included in the Department of Defense or the State Department. (¶(j)(2)(D))

Section 2 of the resolution makes various selective exceptions (viz., "except for matters within the legislative jurisdiction of the Committee on Intelligence") to the jurisdictions of standing committees to accord with the mandate of the proposed committee. This exception (viz., "except for matters within the legislative jurisdiction of the Committee on Intelligence") would affect in this regard the House Committee on Armed Services relative to (1) Common defense generally, (2) The Department of Defense generally, including the Departments of the Army, Navy, and Air Force generally, and (10) Strategic and critical materials necessary for the common defense (Rule X, Clause 1(c); the House Committee on International Relations relative to (1) Relations of the United States with foreign nations generally (Rule X, Clause (k); the House Committee on the Judiciary relative to (4). Civil liberties (Rules X, Clause m)). In other words, the specified committees jurisdictions in the enumerated areas would not include "matters within the legislative jurisdiction of the Committee on Intelligence."

Section 3 would amend House Rule XI relating to Committee Rules to make various additions thereto strictly applicable to the proposed Committee. This new matter designated Clause 7 would be captioned "Release of Information From the Committee on Intelligence." Clause 8 would deal with security procedures applicable to committee employees.

Paragraph (a) of Clause 7 would prohibit any "member or employee" of the proposed Committee from releasing "any" classified material within the control or possession of the Committee or executive session transcripts or minutes of the Committee relating thereto other than as provided by Clause 7.

Paragraph (b) would require the Committee to consult with the head of the department or agency which has classified any material within the possession or control of the Committee (including transcripts or minutes relating thereto) before releasing it to the public. After such consultation, the Committee, by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members, may transmit to the President the material proposed to be released. Thereafter, the President would have fifteen calendar days to make written certification that disclosure would be detrimental to the national security. Any material so certified could not be released "except pursuant to an order of an appropriate court of the United States." The President's failure to make the necessary certification during the allotted time would enable the Committee on Intelligence in its discretion to release the material in question.

[3] Ditto.

Paragraph (a) of proposed Clause 8 to House Rule XI required that before an employee of the Committee on Intelligence ("by contract or otherwise") who performs services for or at the request of the Committee may be given access to "any" classified information he or she must have (A) agreed in writing to be bound by the rules of the House and of the Committee as to the security of such information during and after the period of his employment (or contractual agreement); and (B) received an appropriate security clearance as determined by the Committee in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence.[4] The type of security clearance required "shall, within the determination of the Committee in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence,[4] be commensurate with security of the classified information to be handled.

Paragraph (b) would make it a condition of employment with the Committee that an applicant waive any legislative immunity which he or she "might have" with respect to a prosecution under chapter 37 ("Espionage and Censorship") of the Federal Criminal Code (18 U.S.C.) arising out of his or her employment by the Committee. (The Speech or Debate Clause immunity granted by Art. I, § 6, cl. 1 of the Constitution "applies not only to a Member but also to his aides insofar as the conduct of the latter would be protected by legislative act if performed by the Member himself." Gravel v. United States, 403 U.S. 606, 618 (1972).

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to attach to my remarks a section-by-section analysis of the bill and the resolution which I am introducing today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

THE GREAT BEARGRASS CREEK BOONDOGGLE AND BAILOUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. SNYDER) is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, for a few minutes I would like to discuss a proposed Corps of Engineers project in the Fourth District of Kentucky.

To put the project in proper perspective, let me tell my colleagues that in my opinion this project represents a real boondoggle and bailout of special interests.

First of all, let us examine the merits of the project itself.

I was first drawn into the controversy because the people of Houston Acres, which lies in my congressional district, objected to the plan for a dry-bed reservoir which would directly affect them while allegedly benefiting people downstream in the Third District.

The city of Houston Acres, in fact, adopted unanimously a resolution in opposition to this proposed dry-bed reservoir because they do not want the muck, junk, debris, and health hazard associated with the reservoir immediately adjacent to them.

As a matter of fact, the Jefferson County Board of Health wrote a letter to the corps in which they indicated the reservoir would be a major breeding ground for mosquitoes. Additionally, the board of health stated that it had no money to deal with the consequent mosquito control problem; that it was, in fact, overtaxed by present mosquito problems without the addition of still another one. In a season of widespread national and local concern over encephalitis, to ignore this health hazard approaches criminal callousness.

Let us look at the cost. It is proposed that the corps spend $3.9 million initially to build the project, with a $264,000 annual cost after that. This will provide a 40 percent protection from flooding for the area affected, at best—reducing the damages resulting from a 100-year frequency flood occurring in 1990 by only 11 percent. Moreover, the accuracy of this prediction is seriously undermined by the fact that the proposed dam will control only 2.6 of the total fork basin area of 17.2 miles. To spend the taxpayers' money on such a questionable project is not to my liking—never has been.

Furthermore, the dry bed reservoir proposal would decrease oxygen levels even more in water the corps already calls a direct threat to public health. This would be compounded by the fact that the corps officially recognizes that the area in which the dam would be built already has a major septic tank problem. At least 44 percent of the trees in the area would be destroyed as well.

Clearly, the proposed project does not merit serious consideration—especially if there are alternatives; and there are. No one has thought to ask me, with my position and experience on the House Public Works Committee, about these alternatives. Scurrilous attacks and a few comical lobbying efforts were preferred.

I have had the feasibility of the project studied. The so-called nonstructural plan mentioned by the corps—including flood proofing, flood insurance, flood plain zoning regulations and other similar proposals—offers possibly significant reductions in flood plain damages with a minimum of cost, and with no adverse environmental impacts, and no dislocation of existing land use. Yet these proposals were dismissed by the corps without even subjecting them to a cost-benefit analysis. The corps just shrugged it off, which is still more than any of my critics even bothered to do.

The local authorities responsible for maintenance of the creek have apparently neglected this maintenance almost totally—anyone can go and see that. I have photographs showing debris, logs, et cetera. Would it be better in the future if the project were built?

If anyone had bothered to look at the feasibility study, as I did, before commenting, they would have found in the map on plate 10 and subsequent plates that the creek has several highly restrictive areas, places where a large amount of debris collects due to the restrictive nature of the channel and bridge openings. The level of water in case of flooding could be reduced to the same level, I am confident, if the alternative of widening and deepening the inadequate channel, proper maintenance and enlargement of restrictive bridge openings were adopted. This would avoid the heavy disadvantages of the alternative now being naively pushed, with lesser expenditure of tax moneys and without adversely affecting the people upstream who are not in any way at fault for whatever problems may really exist downstream.

It is important to recognize another point in this regard. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has stated on March 1974, that more than 430,000 gallons of secondarily treated sewage per day are discharged into the upper forks of the creek. This, in addition to the septic tank effluent, would flow into the drybed reservoir and stay there.

Even a half-hearted examination of the facts of the case, had anyone taken the time to do it before running out into the streets frothing at the mouth, would have revealed not only that the dam drybed reservoir proposal is faulty in the extreme, but that feasible alternatives exist which are preferable in all the ways I have mentioned.

Why, then we may ask ourselves, is such a blatantly destructive, hazardous, inefficient, and stupid proposal being put forth with such vigor by these politicians and their stooges in the media. And why the vitriolic and rabid attacks on me for being against it?

Let us consider the following:

In about December of 1975, it became publicly known through newspaper articles that the Paul Semonin Co. and/or development companies with interlocking leadership was in serious financial difficulty and was on the verge of defaulting on several commitments.

At the same time, the Four Seasons Land Co. owned property along Beargrass Creek.

The president of the Four Seasons Land Co. is Elam A. Huddleston, one of the vice presidents of the Paul Semonin Co. The secretary of Four Seasons Land Co. is Jamie Swyers, wife of the local politico Walter Swyers. Other politicos, Alderman Creighton Mershon and Danny Briscoe, had an ownership in Four Seasons.

The Four Seasons Land Co. was listed as owner-developer of the property in question on Beargrass Creek and the Paul Semonin Co. was listed as realtor.

By resolution passed February 17, 1976, Fiscal Court of Jefferson County—with Commissioner Tom Helm, another vice president of Paul Semonin Co., voting—agreed to purchase this land, approximately 2,400 feet of Beargrass Creek and about 225 feet on either side of it, for the sum of $185,000—at $5,000 per acre and $26,300 for severance damages.

Payment was actually made and the deed from the Four Seasons Land Co. to Jefferson County was recorded in Deed Book 4838, page 420, February 24, 1976. The land purchased was basically unusable for building houses.

The $185,000 spent by the county to purchase land from Four Seasons Land Co. occurred before the Corps of Engineers' proposals were ready for acceptance. Neither the final feasibility report nor final environmental impact statement had been issued.

Furthermore, the purported purpose of the project is to provide upstream ponding in the event of heavy rains. Despite this, Jefferson County permitted the filling in of a large natural ponding area which existed at the corner of Hurstbourne Lane and Taylorsville Road. This ponding area was upstream from the proposed dam site and for years has provided a natural holding area for excessive rainfall. After the ponding area was filled in, a large sign was erected advertising it for sale by the Paul Semonin Co., as "prime commercial property."

I ask, does it smell?

You bet it does. The taxpayers are apparently being asked to bail out a number of shady operatives with strong local political ties; the burden of the bailout is being shifted toward the taxpayers. I will not stand for that because I vowed years ago to represent the taxpayers in Congress. They are being asked to participate in this dirty scheme and also sacrifice their health and the health of their children, as well as many other things, in the "bargain." This is the worst kind of cynical manipulation of the people for narrow and greedy interests, and represents the very questionable expenditure of funds at a time when both our teachers and our police officers are being told there is no money to give them.

The astonishing thing is that they were able to gain so many allies in this attempt to do the people in. In the case of the local newspapers and the Bingham television and radio stations, it is understandable—it is the same old case of their doing anything they can to get me because I will not toe their line. I am surprised only that they did it this time more blatantly and incompetently than usual.

INFANT FEEDING RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. HARRINGTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, today, I am pleased to announce that 27 colleagues in the House have joined me in reintroducing the infant feeding resolution, a joint resolution to study the marketing and misuse of infant formula as a substitute for mother's milk in the developing world. Such support represents a concerted response to the unfortunate rise in infant malnutrition, illness, and higher infant mortality which has resulted from the increased use of infant formula in developing nations. A thorough examination of infant formula use and misuse and of the role played by the three large U.S. manufacturers in the promotion of these products is long overdue. In addition, nutritionists and pediatricians have strongly encouraged in recent years the practice of breastfeeding as the preferred alternative for women in developing nations. For the benefit of my colleagues, I am inserting in the RECORD the complete text of the resolution, as originally introduced:

H.J. RES. 1095

Whereas there is a broad consensus among nutritionists and other knowledgeable experts that, especially in developing nations, breast-feeding, given its nutritional, economical, hygienic, and immunological qualities, is preferable for most infants to the use of infant formula as a replacement;

Whereas the preferability of breast feeding is supported by studies showing that the large majority of people in developing nations lack sufficient economic, educational, and sanitary resources necessary for the healthful use of infant formula products;

Whereas studies strongly suggest that formula feeding of infants under these less than optimum conditions in developing countries is a major cause of malnutrition and high infant mortality among such infants;

Whereas breast-feeding cannot indefinitely fulfill all the nutritional needs of infants in developing countries and should therefore be part of a comprehensive approach to family health and nutrition which includes the use of supplementary weaning foods necessary in later infancy;

Whereas United States businesses are involved in the manufacturing, marketing, or selling of infant formula in numerous developing nations, employing advertising and other promotional practices which contribute to the use of infant formula, even though such use often does not best serve the nutritional needs and overall health of children in such nations;

Whereas the above business practices undercut the concern which the Congress has expressed for the nutrition, health, and general welfare of people in developing nations through multilateral and bilateral assistance programs, including those programs conducted by the Agency for International Development; and

Whereas many such businesses have adopted voluntarily a code of ethics which includes an affirmation that "product labelling will affirm breast-feeding as the first choice for the nutrition of normal infants": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That this joint resolution may be cited as the "Infant Feeding Resolution".

SEC. 2. The Agency for International Development shall devise and carry out in partnership with developing nations a multifaceted strategy designed to promote breast feeding within the context of integrated programs of nutrition and health improvement for mothers and children. This strategy shall focus on reversing the trend toward early weaning by using educational, promotional, mass-media, or community outreach programs as appropriate in each developing nation. It shall be aimed at reaching families, professional and paraprofessional health care personnel, and policy makers. In addition, the Agency for International Development shall provide technical, financial, and material support to individuals or groups at the local level for the promotion of breast feeding and sound maternal and child nutrition within their own countries. The Agency shall build on its past and current efforts as appropriate in developing a comprehensive strategy toward these objectives.

SEC. 3. It is the sense of the Congress that the United States based businesses, and United States subsidiaries of foreign based businesses, involved in the manufacturing, marketing, or selling of infant formula have a responsibility to conduct their overseas activities in ways which do not have adverse effects on the nutritional health and well-being of people in developing nations.

SEC. 4. (a) The President shall conduct a detailed study into the nature, scope, and extent of the effects of infant formula use in developing nations. The study shall include specific information on the following items with respect to developing nations:

(1) Estimates by region of—

(A) the numbers of mothers and children using infant formula, including their socio-economic status and literacy levels;

(B) the extent to which such formula is necessary to supplement available mother's milk and locally produced and available low-cost weaning foods; and

(C) the nutritional and health effects of infant formula use under existing local conditions.

(2) The names of all businesses involved in infant formula manufacturing, marketing, or selling, and information on sales volume, profits, advertising and promotional expenditures, type of ownership, and home country of each such business.

(3) The advertising and promotional techniques employed by United States businesses and United States subsidiaries of foreign based businesses and the degree to which these practices contribute to early weaning trends.

(4) The extent and types of direct and indirect support provided by any United States Government agency to businesses involved in infant formula manufacturing, marketing, or selling.

(5) The nature and extent to which bribes and other illegal payments may have been made by such businesses to secure markets for and to promote their products in developing nations.

(b) Not later than the end of the one year period beginning on the date of enactment of this joint resolution, the President shall transmit to the Congress a report on the results of the study conducted pursuant to subsection (a). Such report shall contain specific findings and recommendations with respect to—

(1) ways in which bilateral and multilateral nutrition and health programs might more effectively address the problems created or exacerbated by the manufacturing, marketing, or selling of infant formula in developing nations;

(2) ways of strengthening efforts to deal with such problems by international organizations such as the United Nations Protein-Calorie Advisory Group, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the World Food Council, and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development;

(3) appropriate remedies including legislation or administrative action; and

(4) areas for further study and monitoring.

PROPOSED MEDICARE-MEDICAID AMENDMENTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am today, in collaboration with the Honorable PAUL ROGERS, chairman of the Commerce Committee's Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, introducing a bill containing provisions aimed at combating some of the more flagrant abuses of the medicaid and medicare programs. We are introducing this bill, which is identical to a bill just introduced by Senator TALMADGE, in the belief that it warrants intensive public examination and discussion to assure that the Congress is embarking on the proper course. My distinguished colleague from Florida has indicated his intent to hold a public hearing on this bill. I fully endorse such action. The possibility that the provisions of this bill may be included in amendments to a House-passed bill now pending in the Senate, and, thus, be returned to the House for resolution in conference, is a compelling reason to provide an opportunity for public comment.

The recent disclosures of widespread fraud and abuse in the medicaid and medicare programs by unscrupulous practitioners and organizations have emphasized the need for appropriate congressional action to curb these abuses. As Members know, I have consistently maintained the position that fraud and abuse, as well as ineffective administration, have contributed to the inflation of program costs and impaired public confidence in these programs. I have, therefore, consistently supported proposals for effective reforms—the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Health has, in fact, been actively engaged in a major assessment of a number of more basic reforms in medicare.

The bill we are introducing today—despite certain drafting imperfections—provides for the implementation of some immediate measures which, I believe, warrant careful consideration as first steps toward the more thoroughgoing reforms that are needed. But, I must emphasize that I do have reservations about the adequacy and potential consequences of some of this bill's provisions. I believe they need to be carefully weighed before we act on them. It is my hope that by introducing this bill now attention can be immediately focused on the wisdom and effectiveness of these several measures. The critical analysis and comments of Members, as well as the public, will be vital to us in preparing for the conference on these provisions, should that contingency arise, and for House consideration of any bill that may come before it which aims at curbing fraud and abuse in medicaid and medicare.

I am including in the RECORD at this time a brief discussion of the purpose and provisions of the bill prepared by Senator TALMADGE:

PROPOSED TALMADGE MEDICARE AND MEDICAID ANTI-FRAUD AMENDMENTS

The initial section of the bill establishes within the Department of Health, Education and Welfare an Office of Central Fraud and Abuse Control. This unit would have overall responsibility to direct, coordinate and make policy with respect to fraud and abuse monitoring and investigation at all organizational levels in Medicare and Medicaid. Unit personnel could also initiate and conduct investigations of alleged fraud and abuse.

To meet the needs of U.S. Attorneys and State prosecutors, the unit, at the request of prosecutors, would be required to provide all appropriate investigative support and assistance, including temporary assignment of Federal personnel to assist U.S. and State prosecutors in the development of fraud cases arising out of Medicare and Medicaid.

The bill clarifies that the prohibition against assigning Medicare and Medicaid claims to third parties, such as factoring firms, also applies to situations where a hospital or doctor tries to bypass the prohibition by using a power of attorney. This is a problem which has been highlighted in recent hearings with respect to Medicaid mills in New York City, as well as in Medicaid activities in Illinois.

The bill would require disclosure by providers and suppliers of services under Medicare and Medicaid—including so-called Medicaid mills—to the Secretary of HEW and the Comptroller General of full and complete information as to the owners of the facilities; those sharing in the proceeds or fees; business dealings between the reports.

This section would also require the Secretary and the States to have agreements with independent laboratories, independent pharmacies and independent durable medical equipment suppliers, who are paid directly with Government funds, under which such organizations would agree to provide access to their books and records pertaining to billing and paying for goods and services. This is similar to the type of information which hospitals and nursing homes are now required to provide. Additionally, Federal personnel and the Comptroller General would have direct access to provider records under Medicaid on a basis similar to the access which State Medicaid program people now have.

These provisions will facilitate the identification of exploitive and self-dealing arrangements. It will enable Federal and State investigative personnel and prosecutors to secure under law information indicating the presence or absence of a fraudulent or abusive financial arrangement.

Currently the penalties for fraudulent acts and false reporting under Medicare and Medicaid are defined as misdemeanors subject to fines of up to $10,000 and not more than one year imprisonment. A section of the bill changes these penalties to define such crimes as felonies punishable by up to five years' imprisonment and $10,000 fines.

Professional Standards Review Organizations (PSRO's) are required under present law to review hospital care. However, under law, where a PSRO requests responsibility for review of other types of health services under Medicare or Medicaid, the Secretary of HEW is authorized to delegate that responsibility to the PSRO. To date, because of delays in program funding and implementation, operating PSRO's are almost wholly concentrated in reviewing inpatient hospital care. A section of the bill would require the Secretary to give priority to requests from a PSRO which desires to undertake review of care in "shared health care facilities"—the so-called Medicaid mills. The Secretary would give highest priority to requests from PSRO's in areas with substantial concentrations of these "shared health care facilities". The effect of having the PSRO voluntarily assume this responsibility for "shared facility" review might well result in determinations by the physicians of the PSRO that the care or patterns of practice of given practitioners do not meet professional standards or that care and services being provided are not medically necessary. Such findings by the PSRO preclude payment of Federal funds for the care and can also result in PSRO recommendation of suspension of eligibility to participate in Medicare or Medicaid. These latter provisions are sanctions available to the PSRO under present law which would be available in their review of care in "shared health care facilities." The PSRO would also be authorized, in cases where it encounters possible fraud, to refer such cases to appropriate State and Federal law enforcement agencies as well as to the Secretary of HEW.

The provision further clarifies that, where the Secretary has delegated review responsibility to a PSRO, this review is binding for both Medicare and Medicaid; all other duplicative review requirements under other provisions of law terminate; and reiterates the legislative intent that the costs of PSRO operation are to be financed wholly by the Federal Government with respect to Medicare and Medicaid review activities.

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, last week Governor Carter addressed the B'nai B'rith 1976 Biennial International Convention held here in Washington. I would like to insert the text of his speech in the RECORD.

REMARKS BY JIMMY CARTER

TO PROMOTE HUMAN RIGHTS IN OUR IMPERFECT WORLD

It is a special pleasure to be here today, because I believe we share a common heritage, and a common commitment, that brings us together.

In 1843, B'nai B'rith was founded by a small group of immigrants who sought to preserve for themselves and others the religious and personal liberty they had been denied abroad.

So it was with those who founded my church in this country, to insure liberty of conscience.

I am proud to meet with a group of men and women with whom I share a total commitment to the preservation of human rights, individual liberty, and freedom of conscience.

I would like to talk to you about my view of how our nation should encourage and support those priceless qualities throughout the world.

BALANCE REALISM AND IDEALISM

This is, as you know, a difficult question. It requires a careful balancing of realism and idealism—of our understanding of the world as it is, and our vision of the world as it should be.

The question, I think, is whether in recent years our highest officials have not been too pragmatic, even cynical, and as a consequence have ignored those moral values that had often distinguished our country from the other great nations of the world.

We must move away from making policies in secret: without the knowledge and approval of the American people.

I have called for closer ties with our traditional allies, and stronger ties with the state of Israel. I have stressed the necessity for a strong defense—tough and muscular, and adequate to maintain our freedom under any conceivable circumstances.

But military strength alone is not enough. Over the years, our greatest source of strength has come from those basic, priceless values which are embodied in our declaration of independence, our constitution, and our bill of rights: our belief in freedom of religion—our belief in freedom of expression—our belief in human dignity.

These principles have made us great, and unless our foreign policy reflects them, we make a mockery of all those values that we have celebrated in this bicentennial year.

PURSUE POLICIES CONSISTENT WITH PROCLAIMED VALUES

We have not always lived up to our ideals, but I know of no great nation in history that has more often conducted itself in a moral, unselfish, generous manner abroad, and provided more freedom and opportunity to its own citizens at home.

Still, in recent years, we have had reason to be troubled. Often there has been a gap between the values we have proclaimed and the policies we have pursued. We have often been overextended, and deeply entangled in the internal affairs of distant nations. Our government has pursued dubious tactics, and "national security" has sometimes been a cover-up for unnecessary secrecy and national scandal.

We stumbled into the quagmires of Cambodia and Vietnam, and carried out heavy-handed efforts to destroy an elected government in Chile. In Cyprus, we let expediency triumph over fairness, and lost both ways.

We responded inadequately to human suffering in Bangladesh, Burundi, the Sahel, and other underdeveloped nations.

We lessened the prestige of our foreign service by sending abroad ambassadors who were distinguished only by the size of their political contributions.

We have allowed virtually unlimited sales of U.S. arms to countries around the world—a policy as cynical as it is dangerous.

ARAB BOYCOTTS VIOLATE OUR STANDARDS

I find it unacceptable that we have in effect condoned the effort of some Arab countries to tell American businesses that in order to trade with one country or company, they must observe certain restrictions based on race or religion. These so-called "Arab boycotts" violate our standards of freedom and morality.

I regret that a senior official of the Ford Administration, and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, last week told Congress that efforts should not be made to address this basic issue of human rights.

Moreover, according to a recent House Subcommittee report, the Department of Commerce has shut its eyes to the boycott by failing to collect information on alleged offenses, and failing to carry out a firm policy against the boycott.

If I become President, all laws concerning these boycotts will be vigorously enforced.

HUMAN FREEDOM MUST NOT BE DENIED

We also regret our government's continuing failure to oppose the denial of human freedom in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

The Republican Administration, with the Sonnenfeldt statement, has shown a lack of sensitivity to the craving of the Eastern European people for greater independence. That is unacceptable.

Only 13 months ago, President Ford and Henry Kissinger travelled to Helsinki to sign the treaty of comprehensive security and cooperation in Europe. It was supposed to lead to greater personnel freedom for the peoples of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, including greater freedom to travel, to marry, and to emigrate. But since that elaborate signing ceremony in Finland, the Russians have all but ignored their pledge—and the Ford Administration has looked the other way.

Similarly, the American government has failed to make serious efforts to get the Russians to permit greater numbers of people to emigrate freely to the countries of their choice, and I commend those members of Congress and others who have demonstrated a strong personal concern and commitment to that goal.

Despite our deep desire for successful negotiation on strategic arms and nuclear proliferation, we cannot pass over in silence the deprivation of human rights in the Soviet Union. The list of Soviet prisoners is long, and includes both Christians and Jews. I will speak only of two: Vladimir Bukovsky and Vladimir Slepak. Bukovsky, a young scientist, has been imprisoned most of the last 13 years for criticisms of the Soviet regime. Slepak, a radio engineer in Moscow, applied for an exit visa for Israel in April of 1970. The visa was denied, and since 1972, he has been denied the right to hold a job.

I ask why such people must be deprived of their basic rights, a year after Helsinki. And if I become President, the fate of men like Bukovsky and Slepak will be very much on my mind as I negotiate with the Soviet Union.

Liberty is curtailed in non-Communist countries, too, of course. There are many cases of political persecution in Chile and reports of brutal torture that are too well documented to be disbelieved.

There are those regimes, such as South Korea, which openly violate human rights, although they themselves are under threat from Communist regimes which represent an even greater level of repression.

USE OUR INFLUENCE TO INCREASE FREEDOM

Even in such cases, however, we should not condone repression or the denial of freedom. On the contrary, we should use our influence to increase freedom in those countries that depend on us for their very survival.

Denials of human rights occur in many places and many ways. In Ireland, for example, violence has bred more violence, and caused untold human suffering which brings sorrow to the entire civilized world.

I do not say to you that these are simple issues.

I do not say that we can remake the world in our own image. I recognize the limits on our power, and I do not wish to see a swing from one extreme of cynical manipulation to the other extreme of moralistic zeal, which can be just as dangerous.

But the present administration has been so obsessed with balance of power politics that it has often ignored basic American values and a proper concern for human rights. The leaders of this administration have rationalized that there is little room for morality in foreign affairs, and that we must put self-interest above principle.

I disagree strongly.

FOREIGN POLICY MUST REFLECT OUR NATIONAL IDEALS

Ours is a great and powerful nation, committed to certain enduring ideals, and those ideals must be reflected in our foreign policy.

There are practical, effective ways in which our power can be used to alleviate human suffering around the world.

We should begin by having it understood that if any nation, whatever its political system, deprives its people of basic human rights, that fact will help shape our people's attitude toward that nation's government.

If other nations want our friendship and support, they must understand that we want to see basic human rights respected.

Our power is not unlimited, but neither is it insignificant, and I believe that if we are sensitive and if we are concerned, there can be many instances when our power can make a crucial difference to thousands of men and women who are the victims of oppression around the world.

We must be realistic. Although we believe deeply in our own system of government and our own ideals, we do not and should not insist on identical standards or an identical system in all other nations. We can live with diversity in governmental systems, but we cannot look away when a government tortures people, or jails them for their beliefs, or denies minorities fair treatment or the right to emigrate.

GOVERNMENT CAN ACT ON BEHALF OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Let me suggest some actions our government should take in the area of human rights.

First, we can support the principle of self-determination by refraining from intervention in the domestic politics of other countries, but obviously, we are going to protect our interests and advance our beliefs in other nations.

We should not behave abroad in ways that violate our own laws or moral standards. You and I would not plot murder, but in recent years officials of our government have plotted murder, and that is wrong and unacceptable.

In giving trade advantages or economic assistance to other governments, we should make sure that such aid is used to benefit the people of that country. There will be times when we will want to help those who must live under a repressive government. We may refrain from giving general economic aid or military assistance to a government, yet wish to provide food, health care, or other humanitarian assistance directly to the people.

The United States should lend more vigorous support to the United Nations and other public and private international bodies in order to attract world attention, to the denial of freedom. These bodies are limited in power, but they can serve as the conscience of the world community, and they deserve far more support than our government has given them in recent years.

Insofar as they comply with our own constitution and laws, we should move toward Senate ratification of several important treaties drafted in the United Nations for the protection of human rights. These include the Genocide Convention that was prepared more than 25 years ago, the Convention against racial discrimination that was signed during the Johnson administration, and the covenants on political and civil rights, and on economic and social rights. Until we ratify these covenants, we cannot participate with other nations in international discussions of specific cases involving freedom and human rights.

We should quit being timid and join Israel and other nations in moving to stamp out international terrorism!

LEADERSHIP CONCERNED WITH ALL PEOPLE

These are some of the things our nation can do for a change to promote human rights in our imperfect world. The basic question is one of leadership. We have not had that kind of leadership in recent years. In foreign affairs, as in domestic affairs, we need leaders who are not only concerned with the interests of the powerful, but who are especially concerned with the powerless, with the weak, with the disenfranchised, and with other victims of oppression.

If I am elected President, I intend to provide it.

STATEMENT BY GOV. JIMMY CARTER, NEWS CONFERENCE, COLUMBUS, OHIO, SEPTEMBER 9, 1976

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to insert in the RECORD a statement made by Gov. Jimmy Carter in support of sunset legislation. Governor Carter delivered his remarks last week at a news conference in Columbus, Ohio.

The text of the statement follows:

STATEMENT BY GOV. JIMMY CARTER

CAN GOVERNMENT BE MADE TO WORK FOR US?

Many Americans have begun to question whether government can be made to work at all—whether we can serve basic human needs without proliferating wasteful, bloated bureaucracies.

The challenge before the nation is to cut the bureaucracy down to size and reverse this corrosive decline of confidence. The question before the voters is whether they can depend on the same people and the same administration who helped create the mess to do anything about it.

If I win the people's support in November I hope I will be remembered as a man who came to Washington and put the government's house in order.

For decades we have heard politicians denounce "big government" in campaign speeches. But the actions of some of those same politicians have failed to live up to their rhetoric.

In recent years, the process of proliferation has seemed to move forward with greater and greater speed and less and less control or direction. One extensive study reports that from 1969 through 1973 a total of 80 separate new organizations were added within the Executive Branch, excluding the Department of Defense. For the previous eight years the comparable total was 61.

AN EXPLOSION OF REGULATIONS AND RED TAPE

Accompanying the growth of governmental programs and agencies has been an explosion of regulations and red tape. The Federal Register, which publishes government regulations, increased from a staggering 29,000 pages in 1973 to more than 60,000 last year.

The 1976 Catalogue of Federal Domestic Assistance lists 1,030 programs—302 in health, 189 in income security and social service programs. There are more than 1,200 federal advisory boards, committees, commissions and councils, and more than 400 quasi-governmental units such as law enforcement planning regions and comprehensive area-wide planning agencies.

Only last week we learned that as much as 7½ billion dollars of Medicaid funds is wasted or stolen every year.

THE PERPETUATION OF AGENCIES

There is an old slogan in Washington—if you want to get along, go along. Too many bureaucrats learn the hard way to accept the creed. Unfortunately, so do some elected officials. They dedicate themselves to survival.

That is why, even though government agencies do grow old—sometimes a few years or even months after their birth—they never die. They never fade away.

The agencies gather about them special interests, powerful pressure groups, which quietly benefit from agency policies. In exchange, these interests form determined lobbies. They funnel fees into the coffers of lawyers and public relations artists who fight to assure their favorite agencies' survival.

The powerful few who benefit from waste and confusion, and their political allies are the loudest voices raised in protest, whenever someone suggests that an agency has had its day and should be retired.

YES, GOVERNMENTAL REFORM CAN SUCCEED

Can we stop this process? Can we cut obsolete agencies and wasteful programs out of the federal budget?

There are some people in this country, especially in Washington, who are cynical. They think the answer to these questions is no—so they refuse to try.

I disagree. I think we can confine government to its proper role and make it an effective, efficient instrument of human needs. We can make the government of the United States deserve the trust and admiration of our people.

Only two things are needed.

First, leadership is needed that is beholden to no one but the people.

Second, our leaders must be willing to adopt and implement the stern measures needed to bring the bureaucracy in line.

In the following weeks, I will be discussing a number of specific individual issues relating to governmental reform.

SUNSET LEGISLATION DESERVES STRONG SUPPORT

One such measure called "sunset" legislation requires that an agency will die on a date certain after its birth, unless Congress and the President affirmatively act to recreate it.

I have followed with considerable interest the work of Senator Muskie and the Senate Government Operations Committee and Ohio's own Senator John Glenn on sunset legislation. The current bill, the Government Economy and Spending Reform Act of 1976, stipulates that all tax expenditures, and authorizations for most federal programs would terminate every five years, unless specifically reenacted by Congress. Programs that were part of the same functional area would expire at the same time, to make the Congressional review more systematic.

The Republican Administration, despite campaign rhetoric about controlling government waste, has testified against enactment of sunset legislation before both houses of Congress. Its spokesmen asserted that legislation is not necessary and that the Executive Branch can reform itself. But as Senator Muskie has emphasized, we have heard 18 years of rhetoric about program review by the Executive, with no action. A strong prod is needed from the outside.

Up to the present time, I have not taken a position on this issue. Today, I have decided to do so. Halfway measures are not enough. The instinct for bureaucratic survival, the political inertia which keeps old agencies afloat, is too strong to be overcome except by drastic procedures.

If elected, I will actively support a strong sunset law, covering most of the bureaucratic establishment and covering virtually all tax expenditures as well.

I want a law which will shut down outdated agencies and programs once and for all. I intend to secure enactment of such a law.

CONGRESS MUST ENACT SUNSET LAW

I believe this legislation from the Congress would complement zero based budget which will be immediately implemented in the Executive Branch if I am elected.

The American people should know that despite campaign talk about efficiency, this Republican Administration has so actively opposed sunset legislation.

Some parts of the federal government do require continuity and permanence. Sunset legislation generally should not and does not affect legislation securing fundamental human or economic rights, our civil rights laws, or contributory programs, such as pensions, social security, unemployment compensation, or minimum wage. The specific provisions and timetable of the sunset bill must be worked out by Congress, so they would be compatible with the other duties Congress must discharge.

But after a century of new agencies, new programs, and new spending, it is time to ask the most basic questions. Do our programs work? How can we make them work better? Which ones do we need?

Like other significant innovations, sunset legislation will present some practical problems. But I am confident the benefits of systematic review will outweigh the inconveniences.

SENATOR WALTER F. MONDALE SPEAKS AT THE UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to have been present on September 10, 1976, when the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota, the Honorable WALTER F. MONDALE, Democratic nominee for Vice President of the United States, delivered an eloquent address at the University of Notre Dame, in the congressional district I have the honor to represent.

Senator MONDALE was introduced on this occasion by the distinguished president of the university, the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C.

Mr. Speaker, I insert at this point in the RECORD two articles on Senator MONDALE's address, both published on September 11, 1976, one in the New York Times and the other in the Washington Post.

(By Linda Charlton)

SOUTH BEND, IND.—Senator Walter F. Mondale reminded a University of Notre Dame audience today that John F. Kennedy had been held suspect by some voters in 1960 because of "region, accent, religion." Mr. Mondale said later that he hoped that would not happen to Jimmy Carter.

The Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee did not mention Mr. Carter's name during his 30-minute speech, which was largely an attack on what Mr. Mondale termed the "expediency" of American foreign policy. But he said later that he had meant his reference to Mr. Kennedy's campaign to serve as a parallel to that of Mr. Carter, whose Southern background and Baptist religion are believed to make some voters, particularly Roman Catholics, wary.

Toward the end of his speech, shortly after he told the audience that he "came to the Congress in the same year as Bobby Kennedy" and was "proud that we together spoke and worked all over this country for people who had not been listened to," Mr. Mondale turned abruptly to talk of the 1960 Presidential campaign.

In his home state of Minnesota, Mr. Mondale said, many voters in 1960 were wary of Mr. Kennedy because of his accent—"He pronounced Minnesota 'Minnesoter,'" Mr. Modale interjected—and because he came from a different part of the country. "He had a different religion than most of the citizens of my state," Mr. Mondale continued. "Some of them were worried about that."

Despite what he called the "irrelevant" differences of "region, accent, religion, the rest," Mr. Mondale said, Minnesotans ultimately realized that "what really counted was the candidate and his principles." And he added that the Kennedy Administration "is a symbol of what we need again," a statement that the youthful audience endorsed with applause.

The entire speech was enthusiastically received by the audience, who interrupted several times with applause, and by the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, the president of the university, who thanked Mr. Mondale for taking the student audience seriously.

Senator Mondale's appearance at this best-known of the nation's Roman Catholic universities took on increasing importance as the abortion issue flared up in recent days. Last night, on his arrival here from Kansas City, Mo., the Senator dined privately with Father Hesburgh, an influential and outspoken churchman.

A FRIENDLY ATMOSPHERE

In his introduction of Mr. Mondale this morning, Father Hesburgh noted that the Minnesota Senator's father was a minister, then added, "and I think the Senator comes by his moral concerns quite naturally." Mr. Mondale underlined the friendly atmosphere by replying, "Thank you, Father Ted," before beginning his speech.

Neither Mr. Mondale nor Father Hesburgh commented on their evening meeting, but one staff member described the discussion as a "good" one. Nor would the Senator or his staff say beforehand whether they planned to discuss the abortion issue, although it was unofficially conceded that it would certainly be one of the topics discussed.

Today's friendly reception at Notre Dame, and polls showing that the abortion issue is apparently not influencing voters beyond the small core of fervent opponents, appeared to have eased the fears haunting the Carter-Mondale campaign in recent days.

NO OPEN HOSTILITY

These were that the abortion issue might become a vehicle for persuading voters that the Carter-Mondale ticket is anti-Catholic—the one thing, a staff member said, that could produce a unified Catholic bloc vote.

The influence of Catholics such as Father Hesburgh could be invaluable in containing the issue, but the help of such Catholic liberals cannot be courted too openly. "We're damned if we do and damned if we don't," a Mondale aide said.

Thus far, Mr. Mondale has not encountered any open hostility from the anti-abortion forces similar to that plaguing Mr. Carter. Mr. Mondale's speech today, which dealt with the morality—or lack of it—of American foreign policy, seemed designed in part to assert that abortion is not the only moral issue, nor perhaps the most important, and that the Democratic platform adheres more closely in most issues to recent Catholic thinking about social justice.

Mr. Mondale also attempted to link United States foreign policy with what he called "the lawlessness of the Watergate era," saying that the formation of the "plumbers" group in the Nixon White House was prompted by a desire to prevent the American people from finding out what the United States was actually doing in Southeast Asia.

Mondale Assails Foreign Policy as Tainted by "Watergate Era"

(By Warren Brown)

South Bend, Ind.—Democratic vice presidential nominee Walter F. Mondale told 2,500 students here today that President Ford's administration is pursuing foreign policies tainted by the "recklessness and lawlessness of the Watergate era."

Mondale's statements at the University of Notre Dame marked his toughest attack on President Ford in a five-day, cross-country campaign tour that ended here today.

The Minnesota senator called his speech a "very significant" attempt to outline differences between Republican and Democratic approaches to foreign relations. He also said he was trying to show in his statements that the attitudes that spawned official illegalities at home, of the sort disclosed in the Watergate scandals, have adversely affected American policies abroad.

"As a result of those policies, our government is aiding those (foreign governments) who would impoverish and oppress their own people and is aggravating local (overseas) conflicts," Mondale said.

He added: "Each day, the danger increases that world powers will be drawn into these conflicts."

Recent American actions in Chile, Greece and Angola were plagued with the "expediency and deceit" that characterized Watergate and the Vietnam war, Mondale said.

"It (Vietnam) was a war begun by a Democratic President, continued by a Republican President, and a war, I regret to say, I once supported," Mondale said.

"But even now that the war is over, there is still no genuinely new direction in American foreign policy. . . . We still do not have a government that recognizes that power alone is not enough, that principle must govern our actions overseas," he said.

In Chile, through actions initiated under President Nixon, American intervention helped to overthrow a "democratically elected government," Mondale said. He said the "result of that covert intervention was the creation of one of the most brutal and harsh military dictatorships in the world."

Mondale was referring to the Chilean coup of Sept. 11, 1973, which led to the overthrow and death of Marxist President Salvador Allende. A four-man, right-wing, military junta took control of the country after Allende's death.

The United States, under Presidents Nixon and Ford also "supported and attempted to legitimize the military junta in Greece," and recently "plunged into another furtive and covert intervention in Angola, as if the most important lesson of Vietnam had never been learned," Mondale said.

That lesson is that there is "no conflict between principle and national security," the senator said.

"A government that believes in itself and is believed in abroad has the most important security of all," said Mondale. He added: "No international expediency will achieve security if security is not based on principle.

When we have a foreign policy operating abroad that is inconsistent with the beliefs of the American people, our adversaries know that it is not credible and that it cannot endure," he said.

Mondale was scathingly critical of American arms sales.

"At a time when regional military tensions are increasing, America, I regret to say, has become the world's largest supplier of conventional arms."

The senator said he and Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter, if elected, will have a foreign policy that "will not indiscriminately make tanks and guns available to every country which seeks them."

Nor will a Carter-Mondale administration use the country's intelligence agencies "to topple freely elected foreign governments," he said. "In southern Africa," said Mondale, "we will champion full equality between the (black and white) races and seek to end the evils of racial discrimination."

He added that, under a Democratic administration, America would support Latin American governments that want "lawful, democratic and progressive government, and (that) are on the side of (poor) people who want long overdue economic justice."

Mondale received a lengthy, standing ovation after this speech—the third such ovation he received in his 40-minute address.

There had been some apprehension on the part of the candidate's staff that he would be the target of anti-abortionists at the university, which has a 90 per cent Catholic student population. Carter, on his current trip, has often been picketed by "right-to-life" supporters. However, no anti-abortion sentiments were seen or heard.

NOTICE TO ALL MEMBERS: READ WHY WE MUST PASS H.R. 6684, WEDNESDAY

(Mr. RONCALIO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. RONCALIO. Mr. Speaker, the soft drink industry has existed for over 75 years as a territorial franchised industry. As a result there are about 2,300 local plants throughout the country competing with one another, contributing to the local economies. Soft drinks have increased in price less than any food item in America in the past 30 years.

Soft drink plants manufacturing the same trademarked product do not compete with one another for sales of that product. Just as no manufacturer of a brand name product competes with himself. Instead, the franchisor issues trademark franchise rights to manufacture its beverage to independent businessmen, one to a "territory." This does not deny competition to the consumer, because each manufacturer sells to thousands of retailers who compete for the consumer's favor. And, of course, each distinct beverage competes with every other at both the manufacturing and the retail level.

In 1971, the Federal Trade Commission asserted that this 75-year-old system should be declared illegal and replaced. The FTC staff took its case to a hearing before the Commission's administrative law judge and lost. The judge said:

> 1. The system is thoroughly competitive.
> 2. To tear down the system would > a. reduce competition by increasing concentration > b. increase prices to consumers.

The FTC staff has appealed its case to the full Commission, suggesting that the Commission may find against the industry on a per se basis; that is, disregarding the competitiveness of the industry and simply declaring it illegal because it exists.

H.R. 6684 does not shield the soft drink industry from any antitrust statute or from antitrust scrutiny by any agency or court. H.R. 6684 simply states that if the 75-year-old system is to be found to violate the antitrust laws it must be so found from the facts, and not by a per se declaration. The full effect of H.R. 6684 is to permit a soft drink manufacturer an opportunity to defend himself in court on the merits of his business conditions. If he cannot, he will be found guilty of an antitrust violation.

We will be voting on H.R. 6684 Wednesday. I urge all Members—particularly from the 14 States having primary elections tomorrow—to return to Washington Wednesday in time to support this vital bill.

U.S. POLICY TOWARD THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA

(Mr. GUDE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. GUDE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an excellent paper written on "U.S. policy toward the Republic of South Africa." The author, Brian Shefferman, of Walter Johnson High School, was one of 38 students in my 1976 high school intern program. This paper was the product of an intense 3-week research effort, and represents Brian's analysis and proposed solutions:

WHAT SHOULD UNITED STATES POLICY BE TOWARD THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA?

When considering United States policy toward the Republic of South Africa one must always keep in mind this fact: In South Africa a minority of some four million whites rule over a majority of nearly 18 million blacks and two million "coloreds" and Asians, robbing them of most of their basic human rights.

There are two basic concerns facing the United States in setting a foreign policy toward South Africa. One concern is the protection of human rights, the other is the concept of non-intervention in other countries' internal affairs. It is unfortunate that either of these has to be sacrificed, but it is obvious that in regard to South Africa one must be violated. If the United States refrains from pressuring the South African government into dropping its apartheid policies, blacks there will continue to be oppressed, but to uphold human rights, clearly, meddling must occur.

Thus, the United States must decide which is more important in South Africa's case. In making that decision one must consider what this country is supposedly based upon: that "all men are created equal," that to secure the rights of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness . . . governments are instituted among men, deriving their just power from the consent of the governed". If the United States is to be consistent with its own theories of justice, protection of human rights should be the primary concern and non-intervention secondary—but not totally abandoned. Just because a people happened to be born within the boundaries of a country called "South Africa" is no reason to neglect their rights. Freedom and equality know no nationality.

Whenever the South African issue is raised in Congress opponents of increasing pressure argue that human rights are being similarly violated in the communist countries and in many African states. They ask: "Why single out South Africa?" It is true that South Africa is not uniquely evil, but the distinction is a real one, for South Africa is one of the few contemporary societies where racism is the law. It should be added that in other areas where the United States has found it difficult to countenance the policy of a particular country, it has adjusted its relationship accordingly. That is why there are trade restrictions with regard to Eastern European countries, the Soviet Union, China and Cuba. Now it is essential that the United States adjust its relationship with South Africa. So, facing the United States is the question: "What should and can we do to insure that the nonwhite majority obtain their just rights?"

Some people advocate violent overthrow of the government as a means for the blacks to obtain liberty. After all, the United States obtained its independence through violent revolution when it became obvious that peaceful avenues of change had been blocked. Clearly, blacks in South Africa today are more oppressed than were white Americans in the Colonial period.

But at this time a revolt is not the best answer to the problems of South Africa. First, it is doubtful that it could succeed. Militarily, South Africa is very powerful. It would only lead to the death of many blacks and whites and increase racial tensions. Second, even if it did succeed, a very unstable South Africa would result. Unlike the American rebels of the 1770's, South African blacks have not obtained enough experience or knowledge to organize and run a government. Zaire obtained independence with a total of 12 college graduates. Immediately the nation was split into several warring factions, each attempting to assume power. It resulted in the loss of many black lives and a military dictatorship. The same is likely to happen in South Africa. Third, the whites in South Africa could be either expelled from the country or killed in the event of successful revolution.

Although a successful rebellion is not the best answer to South Africa's problems, it would unchain the blacks from the manacles of apartheid. This, at least, would give them the opportunity to determine their own destiny—an opportunity that does not exist now. Yet, the longer blacks are oppressed, the more possibility there is for violence and communist intervention, as occurred in Angola. In South Africa this was illustrated in the recent riots, which began as a protest against the compulsory teaching of the Afrikaans language and were escalated largely by harsh police tactics, including firing point blank into crowds. The rioting took the fearful toll of at least 176 dead, of whom two were white, 1,139 injured, and 1,298 arrested—all black.[1] There is also little evidence to support the claim that South Africa is changing. In a recent meeting between South African Prime Minister John Vorster and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, Vorster defended apartheid.[2] Therefore, to prevent more violence, it is imperative that the United States immediately seek out and apply peaceful solutions to this problem. If the United States continues its policy of condemning the South African regime, but in reality supporting its status quo, the revolution is inevitable. And when that majority regime eventually comes to power, it will certainly be hostile to the United States and indebted to the Soviet Union or Cuba or whomever, but not the United States.

This has been the experience of the United States in Vietnam, Mozambique, and in Angola. The relatively new Frelimo government in Mozambique is utterly hostile to the United States. It is going to take a great deal of resourceful policy by the United States to overcome that fully understandable attitude of hostility.

There are other drawbacks to supporting the status quo of the South African government. It says the confidence of, first, black South Africans; second, black Americans; and third, the entire third world in the integrity of the United States, because of this difference between rhetoric and reality. It is not wise for the United States to ignore the interests of the Third World countries and their increasing muscle. On the African continent alone, Nigeria and the Congo are major suppliers of crude oil to the United States.[3] These countries could react adversely to overt or covert support by a Western government of a racist regime.

One of the most important facets of American policy toward South Africa is its business involvement there. It is the behavior of this business, not words, that establishes much of the United States' true foreign policy. As of December 1974 the State Department did not have "enough information on the employment practices of each of the individual U.S. firms operating in South Africa"[4] to determine if their treatment of blacks was fair. But it is clear from the testimony of experts on this matter before the House and Senate that, although some companies have adopted fair employment practices, many have not. South Africa's belief in apartheid is strengthened by this American discrimination toward blacks.

American firms operating in South Africa are in a unique position, for they possibly can bring about change from within South Africa. Business should try to push to the limits of tolerance in order to break down apartheid by increasing the welfare of black workers, seeing to their training, job promotions, and the education of their children, providing the opportunity for collective bargaining by recognizing black employee groups, giving equal pay for equal work, instituting pension, life, health, and disability insurance plans for nonwhites, providing legal assistance to employees who cannot afford it and assisting them to obtain decent housing, medical care, loans and transportation. If the self-confidence, organizational skills and financial resources of the South African nonwhites can really be improved, would not these changes increase the capacity of the South African majority to claim their just rights—even if they fail to convert the white rulers into true democrats willing to transfer power to the nonwhites?

Businessmen often say that even if they wanted to do these things, it would not be allowed by the South African government. It is not at all clear that this is the case. NASA has adopted many enlightened employment practices.[5] This action is testing, in a small way, the limits of South African tolerance. Others should join NASA to probe these limits and continue to press toward ever higher standards of justice for their nonwhite employees.

With increased technological developments the number of white skilled labor is not meeting the demands of South Africa's modern industrial organization. More and more black people are acquiring skills, and it is in the economic interest of white industrialists and the white community to let that process continue. American business can train this necessary black skilled labor.

Furthermore, over the last several years black labor has staged a series of more or less spontaneous strikes in various parts of South Africa. Whereas a decade or so ago the police would have trampled upon these strikers and the government would have made no concessions to them, now the South African regime has found it expedient, indeed necessary, to attempt to conciliate black labor. Again, this is a key area where American business can be effective in breaking down apartheid. The more dependent South Africa's economy becomes upon black skilled labor the more effective a strike will be. The blacks could strike not only for economic freedom but political as well.

Some businessmen believe, though, that the South African government will, eventually, reach a point where it will stop United States firms from continuously increasing the opportunities and welfare of nonwhite employees and will force United States business to retreat from the reforms or withdraw from South Africa entirely. At that point, complete withdrawal is best. If United States business cannot be a force for continuous change and ever more effective assaults on apartheid, then it should withdraw.

There are a number of people, particularly concerned, young black Americans, who call for immediate withdrawal. But that course of action, although better than the United States' present policy, would discard an important potential tool for achieving meaningful change within South Africa before it is even tried out. Before American firms are pressured to withdraw, they should be converted into a force to break down apartheid. Most of those who advocate immediate withdrawal honestly doubt that United States business could ever become a force for real change within South Africa even if it had the will. Perhaps they are right. But no one will know for certain until some companies have tried. It that does not result in meaningful changes, then the United States should pull out in the hopes that that will have some greater impact. However, it must be borne in mind that those two strategies cannot be tried in the reverse order: United States business cannot first withdraw and later try to work within South Africa.

Although withdrawal is not the best course to follow at this time it does have its merits. In the first place, it would be eloquent testimony of our national determination to oppose apartheid. The world in general, and concerned people in the United States might begin to believe that this country has not lost its capacity for moral outrage. They might feel we are willing to make some sacrifices to match our denunciations of apartheid. Perhaps even more important than terminating the "appearance of approval" which United States business presence gives to the South African system, would be that when the revolution does come, the United States will not be drawn into that conflict on the wrong side because of our economic ties with the present regime. The United States government does "encourage" American companies to adopt enlightened employment practices, but this does not guarantee that those firms will comply. Therefore, Congress should prohibit operation of any American firm in South Africa unless that company follows radically improved employment policies regarding their nonwhite employees. Congress should prohibit any United States company from remaining in South Africa that the South African government orders out of the country. Congress should also prohibit operations in South Africa of any American business if, after two years although that company has adopted employment practices to the required level, the rights of nonwhites have not been significantly improved.

The United States also has business investments in Namibia. The International Court of Justice and the United Nations have declared South Africa's occupation of Namibia illegal. That position is supported by the United States. Yet, American companies operating there pay taxes to the South African government.[6] Since Namibia is officially under UN supervision Congress should require all American firms operating in Namibia to pay its taxes to the UN.

Uranium is exported to South Africa from the United States.[7] Although it is agreed the nuclear material will be used in a peaceful manner, considering South Africa's precarious position in the world it could be tempted to build nuclear weapons. In fact, South Africa has not ratified the Nuclear Proliferation Treaty.[8] Therefore, Congress should ban the sale of all nuclear materials to South Africa.

Since 1963 the United States has officially imposed an arms embargo on South Africa. The United States, though, sells the Lockheed Hercules C–130 and a light aircraft called Cessna to South Africa.[9] The International Institute for Strategic Study's annual report, a study of the world's military might, lists C–130's and Cessna's as part of the South African air force. These aircraft could be used at any time to suppress any black attempt to oppose continued white, minority rule. Therefore, Congress should ban the sale of all aircrafts to South Africa excluding large passenger airliners.

In short, all American support of South African apartheid policies should cease immediately, for it encourages oppression of

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 139) revising the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal year 1977, report that the conferees have been unable to agree. This is a technical disagreement, necessitated by the fact that the deficit figure in the substitute language agreed to by the conferees is less than either the House or the Senate provision.

It is the intention of the conferees that the managers on the part of the Senate will offer a motion in the Senate to recede and concur in the House amendment to the Senate-passed resolution with an amendment (in the nature of a substitute) consisting of the language agreed to in conference, and that upon the adoption of such amendment in the Senate the managers on the part of the House will offer a motion in the House to concur therein.

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate submit the following joint statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the managers:

The substitute language which is to be offered as described above (and which should be considered the language of the concurrent resolution as recommended in the conference report for purposes of section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974)—hereinafter in this statement referred to as the "conference substitute"—is as follows: That the Congress hereby determines and declares, pursuant to section 310(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, that for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1976—

(1) the recommended level of Federal revenues is $362,500,000,000, and the amount by which the aggregate level of Federal revenues should be decreased is $15,300,000,000;

(2) the appropriate level of total new budget authority is $451,550,000,000;

(3) the appropriate level of total budget outlays is $413,100,000,000;

BUDGET AGGREGATES

Revenues.—The House resolution provided for Federal revenues in the amount of $362.500 billion; and to achieve that level it provided that revenues should be decreased by $15.300 billion. The Senate resolution provided for Federal revenues in the amount of $362.0 billion; and to achieve that level it provided that revenues should be decreased by $15.8 billion.

The conference substitute provides for Federal revenues in the amount of $362.5 billion; and to achieve that level it provides that revenues should be decreased by $15.3 billion. This revenue level assumes a full fiscal year extension of the temporary tax reductions, first enacted in 1975, at a cost of $17.3 billion, partially offset by a net increase of $1.6 billion in revenues from elimination or modification of tax expenditures, and an increase in unemployment compensation taxes of $400 million to reflect an increase in the taxable wage base effective January 1, 1977.

Budget Authority.—The House resolution provided for total new budget authority in the amount of $452.583 billion. The Senate resolution provided for new budget authority in the amount of $447.5 billion. The conference substitute provides for total new budget authority in the amount of $451.55 billion.

Outlays.—The House resolution provided for total outlays in the amount of $413.240 billion. The Senate resolution provided for outlays in the amount of $412.8 billion. The conference substitute provides for total outlays in the amount of $413.1 billion.

Deficit.—The House resolution provided for a budget deficit in the amount of $50.740 billion. The Senate resolution provided for a deficit in the amount of $50.8 billion. The conference substitute provides for a budget deficit in the amount of $50.6 billion.

Public Debt.—The House resolution provided for a public debt level of $700.000 billion. The Senate resolution provided for a public debt level of $701.0 billion. The conference substitute provides for a public debt level of $700.0 billion.

ECONOMIC OBJECTIVES ASSUMPTIONS

The fiscal policy contained in the conference report reaffirms the budget priorities in the first budget resolution. Enactment of the legislation assumed in the totals, together with a supportive monetary policy, will move the nation closer to full economic recovery. The economic assumptions underlying the revenue and spending ceilings contained in the conference report are as follows:

Item	1976	1977
Current dollars	1,692	1,885
Constant (1972) dollars	1,265	1,338
Incomes:
Personal income	1,382	1,542
Wages and salaries	893	995
Corporate profits	153	177
Unemployment rate:
Calendar year average	7.5	6.5
End of year	7.2	6.2
Consumer price index	5.7	5.3
Interest rate, 3-month Treasury bills	5.3	5.8

050: NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $112.1 billion and outlays of $100.7 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $112.086 billion and outlays of $100.606 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $112.1 billion and outlays of $100.65 billion.

These amounts assume achievement of nearly all the proposed sales of materials from the strategic stockpile and absorption in amounts for pay raises in line with past experience.

150: INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $9.1 billion and outlays of $6.9 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $8.770 billion and outlays of $6.763 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $8.9 billion and outlays of $6.9 billion.

250: GENERAL SCIENCE, SPACE, AND TECHNOLOGY

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $4.6 billion and outlays of $4.5 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $4.595 billion and outlays of $4.505 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $4.6 billion and outlays of $4.5 billion.

300: NATURAL RESOURCES, ENVIRONMENT, AND ENERGY

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $18.2 billion and outlays of $16.0 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $17.923 billion and outlays of $16.227 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $18.2 billion and outlays of $16.2 billion.

The conferees, without prejudice, have not assumed any budget authority in this function for the proposed Nuclear Fuel Assurance Act because the budgetary impact of this bill is impossible to determine at this time. Should the authorization and subsequent appropriation be adopted, they will result in budget authority and the Budget Committees would consider the possibility of a Third Budget Resolution to cover this requirement, taking account of the total budgetary situation at that time.

350: AGRICULTURE

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $1.6 billion and outlays of $2.0 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $2.317 billion and outlays of $2.239 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $2.1 billion and outlays of $2.2 billion.

The increase over the Senate level in budget authority in the conference substitute was provided for net realized losses of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the increase over the Senate level in outlays was provided for the short-term export credits program.

400: COMMERCE AND TRANSPORTATION

The Senate Resolution provided budget authority of $15.2 billion and outlays of $17.4 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $17.699 billion and outlays of $16.984 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $17.2 billion and outlays of $17.4 billion. The managers assume that these totals include $2 billion in budget authority for the Emergency Mortgage Purchase Assistance program of the Government National Mortgage Association, and $0.5 billion in both budget authority and outlays for an additional payment to the Postal Service.

450: COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

The Senate resolution provided $7.5 billion in budget authority and $9.0 billion in outlays. The House amendment provided $9.584 billion in budget authority and $9.078 billion in outlays.

The conference agreement provides $9.55 billion in budget authority and $9.05 billion in outlays. It assumes that the Public Works Employment Act will be fully funded in Fiscal Year 1977. Should the pending Public Works Employment Appropriation bill be enacted during the Transition Quarter, $2.0 billion in budget authority assumed for fiscal 1977 in this budget resolution would not be required since it would have been charged to the Transition Quarter. If this occurs, the conferees believe that the $2.0 billion in budget authority should not be used for any other purpose in Fiscal Year 1977.

500: EDUCATION, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND SOCIAL SERVICES

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $24.0 billion and outlays of $22.3 billion. The House amendment provided authority of $23.884 billion and outlays of $22.187 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $24.0 billion and outlays of $22.2 billion.

550: HEALTH

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $40.5 billion and outlays of $38.8 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $40.527 billion and outlays of $38.960 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $40.5 billion and outlays of $38.9 billion.

600: INCOME SECURITY

The Senate resolution provided $156.2 billion in budget authority and $137.3 billion in outlays. The House amendment provided budget authority of $155.872 billion and outlays of $137.000 billion.

The conference agreement provides $155.9 billion in budget authority and $137.2 billion in outlays.

It provides $0.2 billion in outlays over the amounts in the House resolution due to a re-estimate of current policy costs for unemployment compensation. The estimates assume elimination of the one percent kicker. They also assume enactment of the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) Amendments (H.R. 8911) and the extension of Special Unemployment Assistant (SUA).

700: VETERANS BENEFITS AND SERVICES

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $20.3 billion and outlays of $19.5 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $20.323 billion and outlays of $19.539 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $20.3 billion and outlays of $19.5 billion.

750: LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUSTICE

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $3.5 billion and outlays of $3.6 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $3.490 billion and outlays of $3.571 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $39.6 billion and outlays of $39.6 billion.

ALLOWANCES

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of $0.7 billion and outlays of $0.8 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of $0.860 billion and outlays of $0.910 billion.

The conference agreement provides budget authority of $0.7 billion and outlays of $0.8 billion.

950: UNDISTRIBUTED OFFSETTING RECEIPTS

The Senate resolution provided budget authority of −$16.8 billion and outlays of −$16.8 billion. The House amendment provided budget authority of −$16.920 billion and outlays of −$16.920 billion.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION TO MEET ON TOMORROW DURING 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration may be permitted to meet tomorrow, Tuesday, September 14, 1976, during the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us if the minority leadership has agreed to this?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, this has been agreed to by the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DICKINSON).

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's response.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS

Mr. MIKVA. Mr. Speaker, due to a series of longstanding commitments in my district, I was unable to be present in the House for the latter part of the Thursday, September 9, session or for the Friday, September 10, session.

Had I been present on Thursday, I would have voted "yes" on rollcall 704 to concur with the Senate amendments to the conference report on H.R. 14262 the fiscal year 1977 Department of Defense appropriations. And, I would have voted "no" on rollcalls 706, 707, and 708, three amendments to H.R. 10498, the Clean Air Act Amendments, designed to weaken the bill's clean air standards.

On Friday, I would have voted "yes" on rollcall 710, the conference report on H.R. 8603, the Postal Reorganization Act, and "yes" on rollcall 711, the conference report on S. 327 to establish the National Historic Preservation Fund.

Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present for the opening of the session of the House of Representatives of Monday, September 13, 1976, because I was speaking to a senior citizens conference in Chicago. As a result, I was absent for the votes on three rules providing for consideration of H.R. 13958, the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act; H.R. 13615, the CIA Retirement Act; and, H.R. 3605, to reduce beer tax for small brewers. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on all three rules votes.

ELECTRIC AND HYBRID VEHICLE RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT AND DEMONSTRATION ACT OF 1976—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 94–606)

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCFALL) laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning, without my approval, H.R. 8800, the "Electric and Hybrid Vehicle Research, Development and Demonstration Act of 1976."

This bill would establish a five-year, $160 million research, development and demonstration project within the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) to promote the development of an electric vehicle that could function as a practical alternative to the gasoline-powered automobile. One of the major objectives of the project would be the development and purchase by the Federal government of some 7,500 demonstration electric vehicles. Such development would cover some of the areas private industry stands ready to pursue.

It is well documented that technological breakthroughs in battery research are necessary before the electric vehicle can become a viable option. It is simply premature and wasteful for the Federal government to engage in a massive demonstration program—such as that intended by the bill—before the required improvements in batteries for such vehicles are developed.

ERDA already has adequate authority under the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974 and the Federal Non-nuclear Energy Research and Development Act of 1974 to conduct an appropriate electric vehicle development program. Under my fiscal year 1977 budget, ERDA will focus on the research areas that inhibit the development of practical electrical vehicles, for wide-spread use by the motoring public. Included is an emphasis on advanced battery technology.

Even assuming proper technological advances, the development of a completely new automobile for large-scale production is a monumental task requiring extensive investment of money and years of development. While the Government can play an important role in exploring particular phases of electric vehicle feasibility—especially in the critical areas of battery research—it must be recognized that private industry already has substantial experience and interest in the development of practical electric vehicle transportation. I am not prepared to commit the Federal government to this type of a massive spending program which I believe private industry is best able to undertake.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HON. GLADYS NOON SPELLMAN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mrs. SPELLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Belair-Bowie Lions Club, of Prince Georges County in conjunction with the President's Bicentennial Committee of Belair-Bowie have chosen a most intriguing way to celebrate our Bicentennial. On September 20, 1976, these organizations will sponsor the burial of a "time capsule" which will not be opened until the coinciding date in the year 2076. As part of the memorabilia to be included in the time capsule, they have been gracious enough to ask me to also contribute an item for posterity. In response to this request, I would like to include the publication in which these words appear. Therefore, I feel it would be appropriate to extend on behalf of my colleagues and myself a greeting to our descendants of the year 2076.

To you who are now reading this text 100 years hence, we are history. As such, the accomplishments and failures of our generation are part of the foundation on which your generation rests. The pages of this volume testify to our attempts to resolve the many problems confronting this Nation in the 200th year of America's independence. We hope that time has not revealed these efforts as folly, and that our legacy is not one of misdirection and mistakes. Rather, we hope our role in history is assessed as a continuation of bringing this Nation a step closer to the ideals conceived by our Founding Fathers.

We of this century can only guess at the type of world in which you of the 21st century live. Indeed, we wonder if the planet Earth is the only planet you inhabit. And we speculate as to the attitudes of the people of your century. Have you learned to live with each other in peace? Have you learned to love your fellow beings? Have you learned to protect and to preserve your environment for your children and your children's children?

We wish for you so many things we have not known in our century—nothing grandiose, just simple peace and justice; ample food, clothing, and shelter for all; Brotherly and Sisterly love; clean waters and pure air. And we wish for you wisdom far greater than our own.

May God be with you.

IS THE PRESIDENT OF MEXICO A "CLOSET CONSERVATIVE"?

HON. LARRY McDONALD

OF GEORGIA

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues the valuable material which has been inserted into the RECORD by Senator EDWARD KENNEDY on August 24—pages 27316–27320. Most of it consists of New York Times and Washington Post coverage of the takeover of the Mexico City daily, Excelsior, by government-encouraged "strongarm tactics." Before actually reading these articles, I would advise the reader that they are in reverse chronological order, and that the final article has nothing whatever to do with the subject under discussion.

It will undoubtedly mystify many Members to find those on opposite ends of the ideological spectrum in agreement. The explanation probably lies in the fact that, in keeping with the New York Times view of the world, the "good guys" in the white hats are always "liberals" and the black hats, therefore, just have to be "conservatives." As a result, the Times persistently identifies those who strongarmed their way into control of the newspaper as "conservatives." Those with longer memories may recall that Stalinists were also identified as "conservatives" to readers of the Times, when the alleged "liberalization" of the Soviet Union was supposed to be taking place.

At any rate, we must probably credit the distinguished Senator's concern over events in Mexico with his misperception of the present Chief Executive of Mexico as a "conservative."

We do not claim him as one of our own.

HON. DAVID R. BOWEN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. BOWEN. Mr. Speaker, this week a close friend and constituent of mine, Mr. Frank A. England, Jr., of Greenville, Miss., will receive a national award here in Washington for his professional and career achievements and his unselfish contributions of time and service to his community and State.

Frank England will be honored at a luncheon in the Vandenberg Room of the U.S. Capitol by Time magazine and the National Automobile Dealers Association as the national winner of the Quality Dealer Award, signifying the best business and civic qualities of all the franchised new car dealers of America. He was nominated for this signal national award by the Mississippi Automobile Dealers Association.

With justifiable pride, all of us from Mississippi are pleased at Frank England's achievement, and I know I speak for my colleagues in our delegation when I say that we are doubly proud of the favorable image he has generated for our State as a progressive, civic-minded businessman and community leader.

Frank England is also an example of what opportunity and hard work can do in this country. He began his automotive career not at the top but as a lubrication man at his father's dealership in Greenville, and worked his way up the ladder through service and sales, to his current position as president of England Motor Co. This week, he will be honored as the 17th spokesman for the Quality Dealer Award program sponsored by Time and the National Automobile Dealers.

He graduated with honors in 1941 from Southwestern University in Memphis, with a bachelor's degree in economics. He also served as student body president and was a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity. Later, he attended Harvard Business School.

During World War II, he served his country in the U.S. Army until 1946, returning home with the rank of captain to work in his father's dealership, just in time to help with the move from a downtown location to a suburban area, where facilities have since been renovated and expanded until it is one of the top Ford and Mercedes-Benz agencies in the South.

He has been very active professionally in automotive work, serving as president, treasurer, and director of the Mississippi Automobile Dealers Association and has been prominent in leadership of area and national automotive associations.

Frank England has been even more generous with his time and service to his community. He is a past president of the Greenville Chamber of Commerce and was the first chairman of the Greenville Industrial Foundation. He has also served as president of the Greenville Lions Club, head of the Greenville United Fund, and chairman of the Washington County Red Cross, and on the board of directors of the local Salvation Army and YMCA programs.

Mr. England has served on the Greenville School Board, and was president of the board in 1968–69, providing firm, responsible leadership during a time of great change and readjustment in school systems throughout Mississippi and the South. One measure of his leadership during this era of change is that today the Greenville school system is regarded nationally as a model for other communities who face similar problems. He has also served on the board of trustees of his alma mater, Southwestern University.

He has been a dedicated member of the Presbyterian Church serving as an elder and Sunday School teacher, and as a member of the Committee on Assembly Operations of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.

He is the father of two married sons and daughters, has several grandchildren, and I know he is especially proud that his sons, Frank III and Perry N., have joined him in working at the family dealership.

I would be remiss as his friend and as a spokesman for our State, if I did not say that all of us, friends, family and business associates, can only wish that his devoted wife, Myrt, could be here with him to share this momentous occasion. Her untimely death recently was a saddening shock to all of us and a great personal loss for Frank England and his family.

I am confident that Frank England will not rest on his laurels. He will continue to work as a progressive, enlightened businessman and leader for his community, his State and his Nation. Additional honors will no doubt come his way in the future.

But this week he reaches a pinnacle in his career and his life, and it is with great pleasure that I salute him on behalf of his home State. America needs more men, more leaders such as Frank England. He is eminently worthy of the honor being paid him nationally.

PLIGHT OF THE SMALL POST OFFICE

OF IOWA

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. MEZVINSKY. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, September 12, I met in Mount Pleasant, Iowa, with a number of postmasters who supervise small Iowa post offices. I wanted to have the benefit of their experiences with the practical effects of recent Postal Service directives. What I learned did not surprise me. Along with mail handlers, letter carriers, and the public at large, these Postmasters are convinced that Washington-level management decisions have weakened their capability to provide quality mail service to their patrons.

In the face of threatened post office closures, the possible elimination of Saturday counter service, and the reduction of working hours, the small postmaster is unfairly taking the blame for deteriorating service.

The postmasters told me that at an August postal convention, Postmaster General Benjamin Bailar told them that more mail was processed last year with fewer employees than ever before. They feel that this is being done at the sacrifice of quality service. As a result, the public is justifiably irate about paying more and more money for poorer and poorer service.

Most of the postmasters stated a strong interest in increased congressional control over the operations and policies of the Postal Service. I think the need for more supervision is clear. I would not support the reinstatement of a postal system that mixed partisan politics with the delivery of the Nation's mail. It does seem apparent, though, that a middle-ground position of more congressional supervision over a semi-independent Postal Service would help us along the road to improved service and controlled costs.

The postmasters think it is necessary for a basic decision to be made. Should the Postal Service operate as a business, on a profitmaking or break-even basis; or should it be designed as a public service with adequate support from the Congress? I think we owe the public serious consideration of those options.

The Postal Reorganization Act is a step in the right direction. I hope we will continue moving toward the establishment of a more responsive system of delivering the mail.

OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

HON. RON DE LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, last Friday, I introduced legislation, H.R. 15516 that will give to the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa control over all the mineral rights in their offshore waters.

These rights were granted to the States by the Submerged Lands Act of 1953. The purpose of the act was to provide a vehicle for local exploitation of mineral rights, particularly oil, in the offshore waters. To explore, and develop these minerals without local control was, and is, unthinkable. It is no less true of the territories than the States.

In 1974 we in Congress enacted legislation which gave to the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa local control over the submerged lands and some of the mineral rights. These consisted only of sand coral, and gravel because at that time there was not sufficient support in the House to turn over all the mineral rights to the territories. Now, however, it is my hope that my colleagues here in the House will lend their support to this bill.

In the case of the Virgin Islands, this bill would be particularly beneficial because of the fragility of our environment. With the recent advances in technology, mining, and exploitation of the sea have become possible. But this does entail environmental costs. Mining of the seabed causes turbulence which can upset the ecological balance in the sea. The construction of oil platforms can be an eyesore in an otherwise unspoiled setting, as well as increasing the chances for a fouling of the waters. The people of the territories, through their local governments should be the ones to decide upon the necessity of such environmental and industrial trade-offs since they are impacted the hardest.

Mr. Speaker, it is for that reason that I introduced H.R. 15516.

THE PUBLIC WORKS EMPLOYMENT BILL

HON. CHARLES McC. MATHIAS, JR.

OF MARYLAND

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, on Friday morning, September 10, I met with 10 mayors from across the country concerning the proposed implementation of the EDA local public works program contained in the public works employment bill. I think it important to call to my colleagues' attention some of the concerns those mayors expressed about EDA proposed regulations to carry out title I.

Their principal concern was that the proposed EDA regulations set up many obstacles for towns and cities who have unfunded capital projects "on the back burner" waiting to begin construction.

EDA's proposed weighting system of criteria, according to those mayors, places at a disadvantage those towns and cities with serious unemployment in the construction industry who have proposed projects waiting to be built.

Perhaps one of the most telling dichotomies between this bill's intent and the EDA regulation lies in the types of jobs to be generated.

As the committee report notes:

> The funds included in the bill are intended to provide increased employment opportunities—especially in the hard hit construction industry where unemployment now stands at 17.7 percent of the work force.

Yet, one of the EDA factors in the selection of projects, the "labor intensity" factor, places greater stress on the number of jobs generated rather than the type of job.

Because construction jobs are skilled jobs with commensurate wages, there will be fewer of those types of jobs generated per dollar of EDA public works money. EDA proposes to get more bang for the buck by awarding funds for projects generating low-paying, but numerous, jobs. This will not help the construction industry, which was intended by the Congress to be one of the principal beneficiaries of this program.

It is my understanding that EDA is listening to the concerns of those mayors and is adjusting its regulations accordingly. I will be monitoring this matter closely to insure that the final version of the regulations faithfully carries out the legislative intent of the Congress.

ADDRESS BY LANE KIRKLAND, SECRETARY-TREASURER, AFL-CIO

HON. CARL D. PERKINS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, on August 24, 1976, Lane Kirkland, Secretary-Treasurer of the AFL-CIO, addressed the International Association of Bridge & Structural Workers on the occasion of their 35th convention. Mr. Kirkland's comments on the political scene and the economic situation should, I think, be of interest to all the Members of the House, particularly at this time.

The address follows:

ADDRESS BY LANE KIRKLAND, SECRETARY-TREASURER, AFL-CIO

It is a pleasure for me to bring the fraternal greetings of the AFL-CIO to this 35th Convention of the Iron Wokers, and to convey President Meany's warm regards and best wishes for a successful convention.

I have been privileged to work with your great president Jack Lyons for a good many years now—on the AFL-CIO Executive Council and on various committees and commissions dealing with a variety of problems and issues—and it makes me realize how time flies. Jack is now the first in seniority among the vice presidents of the Building and Construction Trades Department and the Metal Trades Department. He is sixth in seniority among the 33 vice presidents of the AFL-CIO, and four of the five ahead of him are on their last terms by virtue of retiring from office in their unions. It just goes to show that a good man with the constitution of an Iron Worker can outlast anybody.

This union is fortunate in having such leadership and Jack's leadership has made a tremendous contribution, not only to Iron Workers, but to the trade union movement at large.

My good friend Juel Drake likewise is a great asset to labor. He is a leading figure in the AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurers' Conference and one of the truly outstanding trade union nickel-nursers of our time.

In a few days, the AFL-CIO General Board will meet in Washington to consider the Executive Council's endorsement of Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale for President and Vice President of the United States, and to plan a campaign to assure the strongest possible labor participation in the national election.

When the Council met in Washington on July 19 and unanimously endorsed the Carter-Mondale ticket, the nature of the choice was clear and present.

Reagan, meanwhile, was boasting that he, alone, had scared the President of the United States into that breach of promise and that veto, just as he had frightened him into dumping Nelson Rockefeller to the wolves.

So now Kansas City is past and we see the inevitable product: A Ford running with a Dole on a Reagan platform—a ticket with its back turned to the working people of America, and devoted to the faithful service of the rich and the powerful. As George Meany once said of John Connally—they have no poor friends.

In Governor Carter and Senator Mondale, on the other hand, we found a genuine concern for the problems of workers and for plain people—for the unemployed, for the poor, for the powerless and for the America that ought to be.

In their platform we found a solid blend of idealism, optimism, vision and common sense. It offers a program for progress that parallels our own.

And above all, we found the opportunity to end the frustration, decay and stagnation of the last 8 years—a condition that has shown only that America can somehow limp and stagger along, for a while at least, without a head—under a Congress without leadership nullified by a President without purpose or initiative.

This election is the only chance we will have for four more years to bring leadership, a sense of direction and purpose, and renewed progress to our national life and to this country's role in the world. We cannot afford to blow that chance now.

While Mr. Ford is really very, very fuzzy on the issues, it seems that he has decided to run against inflation, deficit-spending, and the record of the man who made him, Richard Nixon. Evidently he believes that a pardon washes out all debts of gratitude to his patron and sponsor.

Let's take the matter of deficits. During the last 8 years of the Nixon-Ford Administration, the Federal budget deficit amounted to $173 billion, or about 3 times as much as during the previous 8 years of the Kennedy-Johnson Administration. In fact, the deficits for 1969 through 1976 are higher than the total deficit accumulated between 1944 and 1969—25 years covering three periods of costly war.

Blotting out the purely Nixon, or nonperson years, as Ford apparently wants to do, the fact remains that about $110 billion of that deficit—or about two-thirds of it—happened during the last two years, under Gerald Ford—making him the biggest and fastest debt-monger in the history of the American Presidency.

But even that is only part of the story of what the Nixon-Ford Administration has done to this country.

These deficits are the direct result of massive unemployment deliberately contrived and perpetuated by the economic policies of the last 8 years. Each percentage point of unemployment costs the Federal government—in lost revenues and added costs—about $16 billion a year. The entire deficit is the consequence of this policy of managed unemployment—designed to "fight inflation" by making workers fearful, docile and hungry.

Over and above the Federal budget deficit, this Nixon-Ford policy has cost the nation—businessmen, farmers, shopkeepers, workers, everyone—a loss of $546.2 billion in Gross National Product over this 8 year period—measured against what would have been produced and sold if there has been anywhere near full employment, even at a 4 percent unemployment rate. I do not have to tell you what this has meant to the construction industry.

Think of the colossal waste of manpower, productivity, money, talent, opportunity and human hopes and dreams that these figures entail. And when Gerald Ford denounces those who seek ways to break this trend and end these losses as "big spenders", then surely it is fair to label him as the "great waster" of all time.

Here again, most of that loss occurred, not under Nixon (when it was bad enough), but in the last two years under Gerald Ford.

The last 8 years have seen unemployment rise from 3½ percent in 1969 to the present official level of 7.8 percent.

If we agree with Ford that Nixon is a nonperson whom he never met or served and look at only the last 2 years—the record is, if anything, even more damning. Since Gerald Ford took office in August 1974, official unemployment rose from 5½ percent of the labor force (or 5,987,000) to 7.8 percent (or 7,577,000). In two years, he presided over a 50 percent increase in unemployment.

What about inflation? You all know that the conventional academic wisdom blames all inflation on labor, and that old doctrine is the gospel of the Ford Administration. Weaken unions, hold down wages and foster unemployment and economic insecurity and you have the problem licked.

Economists have a name for this formula. They call it the Phillips Curve. It meets all the tests of academic wisdom—except the tests of reality and common sense.

A casual examination of the Consumer Price Index will show that the inflation of the last 8 years stemmed from four main sources:

(1) The highest interest rates in more than a century—driving up costs and stifling enterprise throughout the economy—particularly in housing and other construction.

(2) The sky-rocketing cost of all forms of energy, following the Arab oil embargo.

(4) Medical care—made far more onerous by the continuing absence of any national system for the control and prepayment of costs.

To these key factors you can add the effects of two Nixon devaluations of the dollar, driving up the dollar costs of imports and raw materials of a host of products.

None of these elements of this inflation is affected in any significant way by workmen's wages or labor costs. Labor is not the culprit. The true culprits are running for reelection to the White House, the Federal Reserve Board, the Council of Economic Advisers and the Treasury Department under the shaggy banner of Ford and Dole.

These simple obvious facts underscore the idiocy of the continuing dedication of the Ford Administration to the proposition that inflation can be curtailed by unemployment, restrictions on labor, tighter money, higher interest rates and uncontrolled increases in gas and oil prices.

These facts explain why unemployment and inflation have soared hand-in-hand over the past 8 years, in contradiction of the economists' neat little Phillip Curve, and the vaporous theories of Arthur Burns, William Simon and Alan Greenspan.

This Administration is responsible for the persistence of heavy unemployment, deficit spending and inflation, resisting as it has, every effort by the Congress to find a way to grapple with real problems.

In the fact of a continuing—if hidden—energy crisis, our dependence on foreign oil has grown from 29 percent at the time of the Arab embargo in October 1973, to 44 percent today, and it is rapidly getting worse. And the Ford White House continues to tell us that everything is rosy.

The record and role of the Nixon-Ford Administration in these events is a continuing disaster, marked by maladministration, obstruction and negligence.

They have dismantled constructive programs and they have imposed the most onerous burdens upon the plain people of America.

They have left this nation increasingly vulnerable and exposed to attack and they have not told the people the truth about those things they must know in order to rise to the defense of their country.

They have been weighed in the balance and found wanting.

We cannot and ought not endure the risk or pay the price of four more years of Ford and Company.

For our members and our country's sake, they must be removed from the seat of executive power and sent to the dignity of retirement and to the preparation and purveyance of stately memoirs and commentaries.

This election is not somebody else's fight. As representatives of workers, it is ours; it goes with the territory.

To that end, the trade union movement must strive. With your help, and with the help of every international and local union, and of every state and local central body, we shall prevail.

LONG-TIME LATIN AMERICAN SCHOLAR AT UT HONORED

HON. J. J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. PICKLE, Mr. Speaker, for many years, the University of Texas has justly enjoyed a reputation in the academic community as being one of the leading universities for the study of Latin America. In its formative stage, this movement was spearheaded by Prof. Eugene Barker and in the modern era Prof. Nettie Lee Benson has carried on this tradition. Recently, Dr. Benson was honored for her singular achievements in this field.

Dr. Benson is a name that all serious students of Latin American history know, and the university has been very fortunate to have her services for more than 30 years.

I am enclosing an article from the September 6, 1976, Austin Citizen describing the ceremony which saluted her:

SCHOLARLY CONTRIBUTIONS—UNIVERSITY HONORS DR. BENSON

Dr. Nettie Lee Benson was honored at "an evening of appreciation" at The University of Texas for her contributions to scholarly studies on Latin America.

Dr. Benson was director of the University's world-renowned Latin American Collection from 1942 to 1975. She is a former professor in the Graduate School of Library Science and continues to teach in the History Department.

After her retirement from administrative duties in the Latin American Collection, the UT System Board of Regents named it the Nettie Lee Benson Latin American Collection. In making the recommendations to the Regents, UT Austin President Lorene Rogers said:

"I think that this is an appropriate honor to the woman who for many years has been the single guiding influence in the establishment and development of this preeminent collection."

The "evening of appreciation" was arranged under auspices of the Office of the President, assisted by the Institute of Latin American Studies and the Benson Collection, now directed by Ms. Laura Gutierrez-Witt.

Dr. Thomas F. McGann, UT history professor and Latin Americanist, was master of ceremonies for the program in the East Campus Lecture Hall, which was followed by a reception at the LBJ Library.

Speakers paying tribute to Dr. Benson's historical activities and bibliographical activities were Dr. Mary Kahler. chief of the Latin American, Portuguese and Spanish Division of the Library of Congress, and Dr. Romeo Flores Caballero, head of the division of international affairs in the Ministry of National Patrimony of the Mexican government.

Dr. Flores is a former student of Dr. Benson and wrote his Ph.D. dissertation under her direction. A number of her other former students also attended the event, along with colleagues from the history field in the U.S. and Mexico, members of the University community and associates in such organizations as the Seminar on the Acquisition of Latin American Library Materials and the Conference of Latin American History of the American Historical Association.

During the program, presentations were made by Dr. Stanley R. Ross, vice president and provost of UT Austin, and a group of Mexican historians.

Dr. Benson continues her interest in the Latin American Collection, and has several research projects in progress. She is still available to answer questions that stump other members of the staff, and Ms. Gutierrez says, "she is our ultimate resource."

HOLY TRINITY LODGE 146, CFU TO MARK ANNIVERSARY

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, among the thousands of immigrants who came to the United States from Europe at the close of the 19th century were the strong sons and daughters of Croatia.

They, as did others who sought refuge and a new life here, found themselves facing many obstacles: A new language, new customs, new laws. They were a hardworking, industrious people and they took their place in the mines, mills, foundries, and factories of their adopted country.

However, their ties with home were strong and, consequently, they found themselves banding together to help themselves, each other and to perpetuate cherished memories and traditions of their people. Out of this kinship was conceived the desire to find a means of providing care and comfort for themselves and their loved ones in times of sickness or death.

In August 1894, the desire became a reality. The Croatian Association was founded for the mutual protection and benefit of members. Within a few years, lodges were established in other areas, especially in the Pittsburgh region.

One such lodge was Holy Trinity Lodge No. 146, located in the small communiay of Versailles Borough in my 20th Congressional District. Founded on February 24, 1901, Holy Trinity Lodge will observe its 75th anniversary at a banquet scheduled for Sunday, October 3.

At this event, the officers and members of the lodge will pay tribute to 10 individuals who have belonged to the lodge for 50 years. These honored guests are Mijo Lugaric, Mary Stanich, Mildred Zalac, Catherine Billy, Ann Stanisic, Kata Kralj, Mary Obranic, Frances Puhala, Joseph Zalac, and Steve Horvatincic.

These men and women have witnesed many changes in their lodge since the original 14 founding fathers agreed a hall was needed for the new group's meetings and social activities. The first hall was constructed in 1917 when the lodge had only 60 members but by 1936 membership had grown to 204 and the hall could not accommodate all their needs. It has since undergone other renovations as necessary for today lodge membership totals 758 adults, 345 juniors, and 1,500 social members.

It is fitting and proper, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that recognition be given the founders of Lodge 146: Josip Zagudovic, Janko Zalac, Grga Prtljaga, Mijo Zalac, Mijo Puskar, Janko Zalac, Vinko Zalac, Mijo Majsak, Stejpan Skor, Vinko Skor, Ivan Kovacic, Ante Dupin, Kazimir Selebaj and Juro Radovic.

On behalf of my colleagues in the Congress of the United States, I extend our official congratulations on the 75th anniversary of this organization to the present officers of Lodge 146, CFU: Mary Balun, president; John Stanich, vice president; John Rednak, financial secretary; Kathryn Pavlic, recording secretary; William Kercell, treasurer; Joseph Zalac, nest manager, and Mary Stanich, Josephine Cindric, John Stanish, and Ann Bunda, trustees.

CONSUMERISM

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. HUNGATE. Mr. Speaker, in a frenzy of consumerism, we passed the original Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, only to find out that those people who are engaged in the day-to-day operation of banks, real estate agencies, law offices and the like actually do know something about how their businesses work. Accordingly, many of us were pleased that the original Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act was amended. The September 1976 issue of the Illinois Bar Journal has a helpful article on the amended act.

The Amended RESPA—"Requiem for a Lightweight"

(By Fred I. Feinstein and Michael J. Baker)

The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) was enacted as a consumer protective measure requiring certain advance disclosure by federal lenders of settlement costs involved in the sale of residential real property units designed principally for the occupancy of from one to four families. The original RESPA and Regulations posed significant problems for practicing attorneys and lenders many of which were outlined in detail in an article entitled, "How to Live With RESPA and Regulation X." As a result of substantial lobbying by various interest groups, RESPA was amended January 2, 1976 to alleviate many of the difficulties caused by the original Act. Pursuant to the provisions of the amended Act, revised RESPA regulations have been promulgated and the full text may be found beginning at page 22702 of the Friday, June 4 and page 23673 of the Friday, June 11, 1976 Federal Register. For all practical purposes, the original impact of RESPA and most of the previous problems for the real estate practitioner and the lender have been eliminated. For example, eliminated is the prohibition against the lender issuing a commitment without the seller's disclosure of the previous selling price of the property. In addition, the advance disclosure of settlement costs provision has been substantially modified, and Section 6 of the original RESPA was repealed, apparently eliminating any criminal or civil remedies against the lender for failure to provide the advance disclosure statement.

The most significant portions of the newly revised Act are: (1) required use of the Uniform Settlement Statement (Form HUD-1), (2) required distributions of HUD "Settlement Costs" special information booklets at the time of loan application (3) good faith estimates of settlement charges at time of loan application (4) required availability of settlement cost information on the day before closing if the borrower asks to see it (5) prohibition against kickbacks and fees other than for services actually rendered (6 limitation on lender's tax and insurance escrows, and (7) consideration of a national land recordation system.

Coverage of RESPA: While there have been no material changes in the manner in which federal jurisdiction over this subject is obtained, substantial clarification of the types of loans covered by the Act have been made. Specifically excluded from RESPA's coverage are loans to finance the purchase of 25 or more acres, home improvement loans, loans to refinance, loans to purchase a vacant lot where no proceeds are to be used in construction, assumptions and novations financing of construction where the underlying lot is already owned by the borrower, and loans to finance the purchase of property where the primary purpose is for resale. Loans which would be covered only because of their eligibility for purchase by FNMA, GNMA, or FHLMC are covered only if the originating lender intends to sell the loan to these agencies. Installment sales contracts continue to be outside RESPA except that a loan to finance acquisition of legal title by the contract purchaser is covered.

Special information booklets: At the time of the written loan application, or within three business days of the receipt thereof by the lender, each prospective borrower must be given the information contained in the Special Information Booklet found at Page 23620 of the Thursday, June 10, 1976 Federal Register Note that this requirement is now only triggered by a "written" application. There is no requirement that the booklet be given to the seller and it should be noted by attorneys that the information booklets are still being received by borrowers too late to affect contractual obligations which have, no doubt, already been fixed by the terms of the real estate sales contract. An alternative would be to require that every real estate broker furnish a copy of a revised and expanded booklet to every seller prior to signing the listing agreement and to every prospective buyer by any seller prior to signing the "Offer to Purchase" or the sales contract. The Special Information Booklet only mildly impresses upon sellers and buyers the seriousness of the real estate sales contract, the fact that it fixes the rights and obligations of the parties and that they may wish to consult an attorney before signing it. It is HUD's hope that these booklets will receive such wide distribution that most people will read them before signing the contract.

Good faith estimates: Lenders must furnish loan applicants with good faith estimates in a dollar amount or range of each charge for a settlement service which the borrower is likely to incur. The estimates must be furnished not later than three business days after the written loan application is received and may be given in Section L of Form HUD–1. Where a lender requires the borrower to select a certain provider of services, it must provide substantial information to the borrower, including a statement as to whether or not each such provider has a business relationship with the lender. The absence of a definition of "business relationship" will no doubt cause lenders new problems since lenders and title companies, of necessity, are in daily contact with each other. HUD informally says it presently considers "business relationship" to mean "any" business relationship. This section points up, once again, a recurring problem in Cook and surrounding counties in which the purchaser's lender will choose the title company and order the commitment on the seller's behalf, notwithstanding the underlying terms of the contract between the seller and the purchaser. Sellers are well advised to carefully consider the terms of the contract in relation to procedures actually carried out in these counties and to take such steps as they deem necessary to insure that the seller is not in technical default under the contract because of the failure of the lender to choose the correct title company or deliver the commitment within the time dictated by the contract.

One-day advance disclosure and use of Form HUD–1 at closing: Note that the obligation of the settlement agent to make the advance disclosure on Form HUD–1 the business day immediately preceding settlement is to be triggered by the request of the borrower, and the agent's sole obligation is to make available only that information which is known to him at the time Form HUD–1 must be used as the uniform settlement form and must be delivered to the borrower and seller at or before settlement unless the borrower waives this requirement in writing at or before settlement in which case Form HUD–1 must be mailed or delivered to the borrower and seller as soon as practicable after settlement.

Form HUD–1 has been greatly improved. The secret in using the form is to work from the back to the front. Recognizing the right to privacy, it is no longer necessary for the seller's costs to appear on the buyer's copy and vice versa. While there is no provision for signature lines on Form HUD–1 there is no prohibition against their insertion. Obtaining the parties' signatures would appear to be good practice so the lender can support the fact that delivery of the form has been properly accomplished.

Seller's settlement costs ignored by new RESPA and regulations: The seller is liable for some closing costs, either by virtue of local custom or by the terms of the sales contract. However, it is possible that the seller will not even get a look at Form HUD–1 until after the closing has occurred. Under 24 CFR 3500.6 the lender must only give a copy of the Special Information Booklet to the borrower, not the seller. Under 24 CFR 3500.7, the lender must only give good faith estimates of closing costs to the borrower. Under 24 CFR 3500.10(a), it is only the borrower who is entitled to inspect Form HUD–1 one business day before closing, and, under 24 CFR 3500.10(c), the borrower can waive both the borrower and seller's right to receive Form HUD–1 at the closing. Sellers do not appear to get much protection under the 1975 RESPA even though sellers usually have more substantial closing costs than buyers since they usually pay any broker's fees and have higher title charges than the buyer.

Illinois land trusts: It would appear that HUD is still ignoring the Illinois land trust. Since the beneficial interest in an Illinois land trust is personalty and not real estate, it would appear that the holder of the beneficial interest can transfer or encumber his beneficial interest outside the application of RESPA. See RESPA § 3(1)(a) and 24 CFR 3500.5(b)(2) which talk about the Act covering a loan secured by a first lien on residential real property and 24 CFR 3500.5(b)(1) which requires a purchase or transfer of "legal title" of the mortgage property.

Exempt transactions: The Regulations exempt from the use of Form HUD–1 those RESPA transactions in which the borrower is not required to pay any settlement charges or adjustments or where the total amount the borrower is required to pay at settlement is a fixed amount and the buyer has been so informed at the time of loan application. This again ignores the fact that the seller may have substantial closing costs.

Conclusion: The 1975 amended RESPA went into effect June 30, 1976. It appears to be concerned only with settlement costs affecting buyers (borrowers) and neglects protection for the sellers. Lenders are in compliance if they mail out the Special Information Booklet and good faith estimates not later than three business days after receiving the loan application. If the borrower waives the right to delivery of the completed Form HUD–1 and fails to exercise his right to one day advance inspection, then Form HUD–1 is mailed out to borrower and seller as soon as practicable after closing. Otherwise, the borrower may get a one day advance look at it, and buyer and seller will receive a copy at the closing. For lenders, RESPA has been transformed from a complex set of deadlines, disclosures, and penalties to a minor inconvenience. For real estate brokers, the amended Section 8 appears to validate former methods of referral fee splitting regardless of services performed while lawyers and title companies must actually perform services to be entitled to a portion of a split fee. While RESPA continues to provide information to the consumer too late to be of any practical value, at least buyers and sellers do not have to wait out the twelve day "shop-around" period which was the earlier RESPA's contribution to the motel and furniture storage industry.

THE CONSUMER PROTECTION ISSUE

HON. EDWIN B. FORSYTHE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. FORSYTHE. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government has played an increasing role in our private lives. The size of the bureaucracy has, as a direct result, grown to be so large as to become unmanageable. The ultimate result is that the manufacturers are being led by the Government toward certain goals. This has left the consumer in an awkward position. He is no longer determining what he wants. It is imperative, therefore, that the Government review its policies toward helping the American consumer. It is my belief, then, that before we proceed on a path toward more agencies for consumer protection, we should look at what we already have. I will continue to vote against the creation of new agencies until we make our present ones more effective.

Unfortunately, some of my colleagues feel that the best way to help their constituents is to set up blue-ribbon panels or to create new agencies to act as a guardian of consumer rights without examining what agencies are already present to provide these functions. The end product is another Federal agency with unclear goals and functions that overlap with the duties of other agencies. It is the consumer, having to deal with this overlapping bureaucracy, who is left confused and unaided. Also, creating Federal agencies does little to help the consumer at the local level without becoming embroiled in massive letter writing campaigns and long delays.

Primarily for those two reasons, I felt compelled to vote against creating an Agency for Consumer Protection (H.R. 7575). I felt that by creating this new agency we would be bypassing already existing agencies whose function it is to monitor consumer complaints. Furthermore, its creation would only increase the size of the bureaucracy while adding little to its efficiency. Second, I felt that H.R. 7575 would not offer any additional protection for individual consumers in their local communities nor would it help in providing manpower to investigate consumer complaints at the local level.

Again, I feel that it would simply be another classic example of the expansion of the Federal bureaucracy invading our private lives with little promise of achievement.

I have, however, striven to support legislation that would have a direct effect on our daily lives. With the increasing necessity for legal aid, there has also occurred a large increase in legal fees. Many people have become caught in the middle and have not been able to afford legal aid, thereby jeopardizing their ability to maintain credit ratings and their future. In this regard, I have continued to vote for legislation requiring legal aide services to spend more money on their clients' problems and less on trying to advance social causes.

Furthermore, in response to the Ocean County Consumer Affairs Department, I have strongly supported legislation prohibiting surcharges on purchases made with credit cards. With money being as tight as it is today for the consumer, I feel that any help that I can give in making credit cards more beneficial is worthwhile. I have also, therefore, supported legislation that would clarify laws designed to help consumers hold down settlement charges when buying homes or when selling them. Again, any help in making the dollar go farther is something that I have been trying to support in the Congress, provided, of course, that it is a sound method and anti-inflationary.

In addition, I have also been very aware of the inequities inherent in our tax laws. However, I refuse to become involved in the partisan battles on tax reform and I will continue to urge a slow, thoughtful approach toward restructuring our tax system so as to eliminate tax loopholes. In this vein, I voted to direct the House Ways and Means Committee to establish procedures for eliminating $3 billion of tax loopholes. I wholeheartedly disagree with the notion that some reform is better than no reform. It is precisely this type of thinking that results in shoddy and unclear legislation which very often ends up in creating more, unforeseen tax loopholes.

My attitudes concerning big government and bureaucracy have, to a major degree, affected my positions on consumer protection issues. While we all want to make sure that we, as consumers, are not being shortchanged. I refuse to believe that more governmental agencies and more Federal subsidies are the answer. We already have agencies designed to aid the consumer. Why should not we refine them and help them perform the functions that they were created to perform. It is senseless to create a new agency because the old one is being improperly administered. One must not forget that consumer protection means protection not only from manufacturers and industries, but protection from wasteful Government as well.

I have, therefore, taken strong stands toward making existing consumer protection agencies more efficient and responsive to the public. But more importantly, I have not tried to undermine the important role of the State in aiding its citizens. In fact, I have consistently tried to prevent the Federal Government from intervening into another aspect of our private lives. I am not against consumer protection, but I am against wasteful Government spending in this area when all it produces are inefficiencies and delays.

MRS. LUCY BROWN WARR TO RECEIVE THE BROTHERHOOD AWARD

HON. GLADYS NOON SPELLMAN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mrs. SPELLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Prince George's National Conference of Christians and Jews recently selected Mrs. Lucy Brown Warr to receive their "Brotherhood Award" in the field of human relations. I have been fortunate to know Mrs. Warr for many years and her selection is a well-deserved tribute to Mrs. Warr's unceasing efforts to improve the quality of life for the citizens of Prince Georges County and the Washington metropolitan area.

Currently, Mrs. Warr is executive director of the United Communities Against Poverty, Inc. Under her leadership several programs have been created to better the living conditions of many residents. They include:

Legal Services for the disadvantaged, the young, gifted, and beautiful company project designed to give youth an opportunity to develop their talents in the arts, consumer education programs, and under UCAP's "umbrella", the agency is the prime sponsor of a consortium of five agencies funded by HEW to sponsor an Emergency School Aid Act project.

Mrs. Warr has worked with the Prince Georges County Public Schools as a vision and hearing screening technician and a nurse-aide. She served as a den mother for Cub Scouts; a leader and delegate to area council meetings for the Girl Scouts; president of her local cooperative kindergarten and president of her elementary school PTA; delegate to County Council of PTA's; and as Liaison for Beaver Heights PTA with the board of education.

Lucy Brown Warr served as a community coordinator to recruit, schedule time, and supervise manpower for the first two public polio clinics at the area school. She was a discussion group leader of the child study group for parents of Beaver Heights Elementary School and a discussion group coleader of child study group for parents of Fairmont Heights High School. Mrs. Warr has been an officer on the board of directors for the Family Services Agency of PGC, the vice president and interviewing committee chairman for Prince Georges County Scholarship Fund, Inc., a judge and chief judge of elections, a member of board of directors of Prince Georges County Health and Welfare Council, and an officer on the board of directors of the Child Day Care Association of PGC.

A resident of Prince Georges County for 25 years, the contributions which Mrs. Warr has made to the community are as extensive as they have been successful. Prince Georges County is by far the richer because of the effort of Lucy Brown Warr. All Prince Georgians owe her a great debt of gratitude, and in behalf of us all I extend our "Thanks."

MEDICAID FRAUD

HON. PAUL G. ROGERS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I am joining today with my colleague, the Honorable DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, chairman of the Health Subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee, to introduce in the House legislation developed by Senator TALMADGE of the Senate Finance Committee to deal with issues of fraud and abuse in the medicaid and medicare program.

Senator TALMADGE has indicated his intention to request that the Finance Committee and the full Senate add these provisions to H.R. 12961, a bill reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and passed by the House which is now pending Senate action.

My colleague and I are introducing this legislation primarily because we believe Members of the House should have an opportunity to review the provisions of this Senate bill, and members of the public should have the opportunity to comment on them in a public hearing process, before any of the Members of this body are required to determine their acceptability in a conference committee report.

The problems of fraud and more particularly abuse in our publicly financed medical care programs are complex ones. They involve inadequate numbers of able personnel administering the program at the State and Federal level; woefully inadequate data systems particularly in the medicaid program; unethical providers—and let us be clear about this—they are at the heart of the problem; a reimbursement system which too often encourages overuse; and lack of alternate high-quality health facilities to serve the poor, particularly in areas of our major cities.

This bill is clearly not designed to address these deep-rooted problems in our health care financing programs. Senator TALMADGE acknowledged this himself in his statement when he introduced the bill. But it is designed to strengthen penalties for fraud, to provide the administration with a clear congressional directive to give priority to fraud and abuse activities, and to strengthen the Federal Government's access to information on providers.

I would note that several committees of the House have already independently acted on legislation in some of the areas addressed by the bill. The Talmadge proposal increases penalties for fraud, for example, and makes it a felony; the Commerce Committee has already reported a bill, H.R. 14319, which does a similar thing. Similarly, the Talmadge bill provides for a central fraud and abuse unit for medicaid, medicare, and the maternal and child health programs. I would note that the Government Operations Committee of the House has before it H.R. 15390, with action scheduled for next week, which establishes an Office of Inspector General within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare with similar, but broader, functions. This proposal has received extensive and careful consideration by the members of the Fountain Subcommittee, and may well represent a preferable approach.

With the introduction of this bill in the House, the Subcommitee on Health and the Environment of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee will proceed to hearings at the earliest possible date. We will cooperate with our Ways and Means colleagues and their staffs so that the hearing process can be of benefit to us both in dealing with our medicaid and medicare responsibilities.

Senator TALMADGE'S summary of the bill is attached.

PROPOSED TALMADGE MEDICARE AND MEDICAID ANTI-FRAUD AMENDMENTS

The initial section of the bill establishes within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare an Office of Central Fraud and Abuse Control. This unit would have overall responsibility to direct, coordinate and make policy with respect to fraud and abuse monitoring and investigation at all organizational levels in Medicare and Medicaid. Unit personnel could also initiate and conduct investigations of alleged fraud and abuse.

To meet the needs of U.S. Attorneys and State prosecutors, the unit, at the request of prosecutors, would be required to provide all appropriate investigative support and assistance, including temporary assignment of Federal personnel to assist U.S. and State prosecutors in the development of fraud cases arising out of Medicare and Medicaid.

The bill clarifies that the prohibition against assigning Medicare and Medicaid claims to third parties, such as factoring firms, also applies to situations where a hospital or doctor tries to bypass the prohibition by using a power of attorney. This is a problem which has been highlighted in recent hearings with respect to Medicaid mills in New York City, as well as in Medicaid activities in Illinois.

The bill would require disclosure by providers and suppliers of services under Medicare and Medicaid—including so-called Medicaid mills—to the Secretary of HEW and the Comptroller General of full and complete information as to the owners of the facilities; those sharing in the proceeds or fees; business dealings between the facilities and owners, and certified cost reports.

This section would also require the Secretary and the States to have agreements with independent laboratories, independent pharmacies and independent durable medical equipment suppliers, who are paid directly with Government funds, under which such organizations would agree to provide access to their books and records pertaining to billing and paying for goods and services. This is similar to the type of information which hospitals and nursing homes are now required to provide. Additionally, Federal personnel and the Comptroller General would have direct access to provider records under Medicaid on a basis similar to the access which State Medicaid program people now have.

These provisions will facilitate the identification of exploitive and self-dealing arrangements. It will enable Federal and State investigative personnel and prosecutors to secure under law information indicating the presence or absence of a fraudulent or abusive financial arrangement.

Currently the penalties for fraudulent acts and false reporting under Medicare and Medicaid are defined as misdemeanors subject to fines of up to $10,000 and not more than one year imprisonment. A section of the bill changes these penalties to define such crimes as felonies punishable by up to five years' imprisonment and $10,000 fines.

Professional Standards Review Organizations (PSRO's) are required under present law to review hospital care. However, under law, where a PSRO requests responsibility for review of other types of health services under Medicare or Medicaid, the Secretary of HEW is authorized to delegate that responsibility to the PSRO. To date, because of delays in program funding and implementation, operating PSRO's are almost wholly concentrated in reviewing inpatient hospital care. A section of the bill would require the Secretary to give priority to requests from a PSRO which desires to undertake review of care in "shared health care facilities"—the so-called Medicaid mills. The Secretary would give highest priority to requests from PSRO's in areas with substantial concentrations of these "shared health care facilities." The effect of having the PSRO voluntarily assume this responsibility for "shared facility" review might well result in determinations by the physicians of the PSRO that the care or patterns of practice of given practitioners do not meet professional standards or that care and services being provided are not medically necessary. Such findings by the PSRO preclude payment of Federal funds for the care and can also result in PSRO recommendation of suspension of eligibility to participate in Medicare or Medicaid. These latter provisions are sanctions available to the PSRO under present law which would be available in their review of care in "shared health care facilities." The PSRO would also be authorized, in cases where it encounters possible fraud, to refer such cases to appropriate State and Federal law enforcement agencies as well as to the Secretary of HEW.

The provision further clarifies that, where the Secretary has delegated review responsibility to a PSRO, this review is binding for both Medicare and Medicaid all other duplicative review requirements under other provisions of law terminate; and reiterates the legislative intent that the costs of PSRO operation are to be financed wholly by the Federal Government with respect to Medicare and Medicaid review activities.

DUCKING AN ISSUE

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, the following editorial appeared in the St. Louis Post Dispatch August 8, 1976. I think it eloquently speaks for itself. Therefore, I commend it to my colleagues:

DUCKING AN ISSUE

Democratic freshmen members of the House of Representatives want the vote of the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment Bill postponed until after the November elections because many of them are involved in close races and fear that a stand in favor of the measure would jeopardize their re-election. Interestingly, the day after the freshmen voted, 65 to 10, to ask the House leadership for the delay, the Department of Labor announced that unemployment in July was 7.8 per cent, the third consecutive month in which it has increased.

True, whether the bill is voted on a month before the November elections or a month after is not crucial to dealing with the unemployment problem, but neither is a postponement apt to save any congressman from defeat. If the measure is as controversial as the freshmen representatives believe, their opponents are surely going to see to it that they publicly state where they stand on it. So whether they have already voted for it or say they intend to vote for it is a distinction without a difference for most voters.

Moreover, the increase in unemployment ought to reinforce their stand in favor of the bill, for it should be plain by now that the Ford Administration's trickle-down approach to unemployment is not working and that a persistently high level of joblessness requires a fresh approach to the problem. The Humphrey-Hawkins bill seeks to do that, by requiring the Government to shape its fiscal and monetary policies and planning toward the objective of full employment, providing funds for public sector employment at the state and local levels and making the Government employer of last resort.

To be sure, the measure would be expensive, difficult to implement and perhaps inflationary, but new approaches to problems always carry risks. Besides, the legislation would not be chiseled in stone; it could be modified as experience uncovered flaws. If there is some uncertainty about the effectiveness of Humphrey-Hawkins, there can be no doubt about the Administration's lack of effectiveness.

INTRODUCTION OF A RESOLUTION HONORING OUR NATION'S TEACHERS THROUGH A "NATIONAL TEACHER'S DAY" ON SEPTEMBER 28

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honor to be once again sponsoring a resolution to honor our Nation's teachers by authorizing the President to proclaim the 28th day of September 1976, as "National Teacher's Day."

In Santa Clara County, Teacher's Day is observed annually by the cities of the county in conjunction with the San Jose Jaycees. On that day we honor those who daily meet the challenge of educating our youth, in whose hands our Nation's future surely lies.

The aims and objectives of the Santa Clara County Teacher's Day, to be held this year on September 26, are certainly worthy of consideration nationwide. They include increasing public awareness of the responsibility our teachers have in formulating the ideals and goals of our Nation's young people. We should publicly recognize and demonstrate our appreciation of the many educational achievements of our Nation's teachers and the long years of training and preparation for their profession.

Each one of us can personally attest to the profound influence our teachers have had on our lives and continue to have on the lives of our children. Surely 1 day each year we should demonstrate our recognition and appreciation of the efforts and contributions made by teachers in so essentially affecting the future of our country.

I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that you and my other colleagues will join me in an effort to proclaim September 28 as National Teacher's Day.

BALL ON THE TOP OF THE WORLD

HON. JOSEPH G. MINISH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to call to the attention of my colleagues in the House the annual fund-raising event of the Mental Health Association of Essex County. This private nonprofit association is a citizens' organization dedicated to the community-based mental health approach that has immeasurably benefited countless lives. My own familiarity with the programs of this commendable organization prompts me to insert the following announcement of the "Ball on the Top of the World" to be held September 19 at the world's highest restaurant.

BALL ON THE TOP OF THE WORLD TO SUPPORT ESSEX COUNTY MENTAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION PROGRAMS

Arthur N. Chernin, President of the Mental Health Association of Essex County, and Alan Sagner, New Jersey Commissioner of Transportation and a Commissioner of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, announced the Ball on the Top of the World, to be held atop the 110-story, ½-mile high World Trade Center, in New York City, Sunday, September 19, at 7:30 p.m.

The 1976 Annual Special Event of the Mental Health Association of Essex County will take place at the world's highest restaurant, the Club, whose every seat offers the most spectacular (and unobstructed) view of the New York-New Jersey panorama.

Barbara Furst, West Orange, Chairlady, and Susie Kasen, South Orange, Co-chairlady, once again are teaming up for a MHA ball. In recent years, they engineered such Mental Health galas as the Great Train Ride to the Hoboken Ball, the Mayapple Ball and the historic Getaway Ball, which inaugurated the Trans World Airlines Terminal of the new Newark International Airport. Mrs. Furst's talents have been utilized by such notables as Governor Brendon T. Byrne, for whom she chaired the 1974 Inaugural Ball. She is also a member of the New Jersey State Council On the Arts.

Mrs. Kasen last year traveled to Monaco by special invitation of Princess Grace to make the display for the International Flower Show in Monte Carlo. She is a partner of Flower Fair, in Livingston, which decorated the Amerigo Vespucci, one of the Tall Ships of OpSail.

Proceeds from subscriptions and raffles advance the cause of mental health by supporting the Mental Health Association of Essex County's ongoing programs of advocacy and direct service for the mentally ill. This citizens' organization works year round for improved care and treatment of the mentally ill in psychiatric hospitals and community mental health centers. It advocates in behalf of emotionally disturbed children in the public schools and the elderly. It provides help such as counseling and in information and referral service for people in need.

Through its day center, Prospect House, the MHA provides hundreds of people with a meaningful alternative to psychiatric hospitalization. Many Prospect House graduates are fully employed, tax-paying members of the community. Finally, the MHA works to reduce the ravages of mental illness. Spokesmen often appear before legislative, judicial and other governmental panels making public policy that affects thousands of disenfranchized citizens. We support research into the causes and effects of mental illness, as well as seeking ways to prevent this disease from disrupting the lives of untold thousands of Essex County people.

Attending the Ball, or purchasing a chance on one of the lovely prizes are two very important ways in which individuals may support the work of the Mental Health Association of Essex County. For more information, call (201) 677-1540.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, for some 59 years, the Soviet Government has been attempting to wipe out religion in the U.S.S.R. The attempts have been a failure. The church, particularly the underground church, in the Soviet Union is growing and the thirst for spiritual nourishment has never been greater among the Soviet people. Unfortunately, as Columnist Allan C. Brownfeld, recently pointed out, the persecuted Protestants have not received the attention their plight merited. Mr. Brownfeld's column attempts to remedy this problem and below is his column as it appeared in the Anaheim Bulletin of August 25, 1976:

BRUTAL PERSECUTION OF U.S.S.R. CHRISTIANS

For some time, the U.S. Congress has been vitally concerned with Soviet persecution of Jews. This concern did not come about because of a natural antipathy to religious prejudice and mistreatment. It came about in precisely the same manner as Congressional concern about a host of other things—school busing, abortion, veterans' pensions, farm subsidies, etc.—has manifested itself. The process is quite simple: a group of Americans, in this case Americans of the Jewish faith, put pressure upon the Congress to act in their behalf. There being no pressure from a countervailing group—in this instance, one which supports religious persecution—the Congress acts.

The Jews are to be complimented and applauded for their concern over the fate of their co-religionists in the Soviet Union. But what of American Protestants and Roman Catholics? Their faiths have been persecuted in the Soviet Union in as harsh a manner as has the Jewish faith, yet they remain silent. Some church groups, such as the National Council of Churches, repeatedly criticize their own country for its shortcomings—some real, some solely in the minds of the critics—but remain silent when it comes to the anti-Christian bias of the Soviet Union.

Finally, and without any notable concern on the part of the church groups themselves, a number of Congressmen appear ready to express themselves on this subject.

Rep. John Buchanan (R-Alabama), himself a Southern Baptist clergyman, says that he has 103 cosponsors in the House, including most of the leadership, for his resolution calling on the Soviet Government to allow christians and other religious believers to "worship God freely according to their own conscience."

The resolution also asks for the release from prison of Georgi Vins, secretary of an "illegal" Baptist group and a man whose case has been a subject of much discussion in the West. Rep. Buchanan noted that, "There has been a good deal of public attention on Soviet Jews, intellectual and political dissidents, but there is more repression than is generally realized against Christian religious expression. I believe this is the first time Congress has considered a resolution naming Christians, and I believe that evangelical Christians would be second only to Jews in the trouble they have had with the government."

A concurrent resolution has been introduced in the Senate by Senators Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.), Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), Clifford Case (R-N.J.) and Red Stevens (R-Alaska).

If passed, the resolution would only express the "sense of Congress" and would not involve any legal sanctions against the Soviet Union. Rep. Buchanan, however, believes that it would put "pressure" on the Soviet Union and raise public interest in the Vins case.

Georgi Vins' difficulties began in 1960 after a Soviet government crackdown on the 535,000-member All Union Council of Evangelical Christians and Baptists, the largest organization of Soviet Protestants. Vins and others were convinced that their organization had become a tool of the atheistic government and formed their own "unauthorized" church council.

Vins has been in prison twice, first in 1966, after a demonstration by his group, the Council of Churches of Evangelical Christians and Baptists, outside the Central Committee headquarters in Moscow. He was sentenced to three years at hard labor and left prison in bad health.

In 1970, he went underground to carry on his clerical work and was again arrested in 1973. He has been sentenced to five years in prison and five years in exile for "harming the interests of Soviet citizens under a pretext of carrying out religious activity." The Soviet government refused to permit Western observers at his trial or a Western attorney for his defense. Now, although in poor health, he is forced to put in 10 hours of hard labor a day in a Siberian prison camp. Left at home in Kiev are his mother, wife and five children—with most of their possessions confiscated by the government.

In hearings conducted before a House subcommittee on international political and military affairs and international organizations on June 24 and 30, 14 witnesses testified that Vins' plight is not an isolated case and provided extensive descriptions of Soviet religious persecution.

David D. Klassen, a member of the same movement as Vins and now a resident of West Germany, testified that he had spent "100 years of imprisonment, torture and suffering in psychiatric clinics, Soviet prisons and experimental camps." He said that one tactic used by the state against churches is "physical annihilation." He said he knew one person who was "torn to pieces by dogs," another "whose tongue was torn out of his head and was branded with hot irons, and another who was drowned in the Black Sea."

The state also takes children away from their parents if the parents attempt to teach them a religious faith. The Rev. Janis Smits. a Latvian Baptist was allowed to leave his country May 25. He said that since March, 1974 he had been performing ministerial duties "for preaching the New Testament" outside his parish, "asking the believers to pray for those in prison and persecuted."

The "spirit of detente" seems not to have affected the lives of Soviet Christians. While Christians in the West look away, the most primitive forms of religious persecution continue in the Soviet Union. By making our opposition to this known, the Congress strikes at least a small blow for truth and decency.

ARAB BOYCOTT COSTS BUSINESS

HON. BENJAMIN S. ROSENTHAL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. ROSENTHAL. Mr. Speaker, the House will soon be acting on two measures which are designed to end American cooperation with the Arab boycott. The conference report on H.R. 10612, the Tax Reform Act of 1976, contains a modified form of the so-called Ribicoff amendment. This provision would cut off a portion of certain tax benefits to American companies participating in the Arab boycott of Israel in violation of statutory U.S. policy.

The second blow against American complicity in the boycott is contained in H.R. 15377, extending the Export Administration Act. This bill would make illegal all American compliance with the Arab and other foreign boycotts against countries friendly to the United States.

The urgent need for these proposals was brought home again last week with the loss by an American concern of a $200 million deal, because of Arab boycott pressures. After months of negotiations, Sea Containers, Inc., called off plans to take over 23 refrigerated cargo ships owned by Maritime Fruit Carriers Co., an Israeli shipping company. James Sherwood, Sea Containers president, cited Arab boycott agitation as the reason for dropping the deal. Sea Containers conducts a substantial trade with Arab States which it was told could be in jeopardy if the Israeli deal were concluded. It now appears that many of the Israeli-owned ships will be sold to Cunard Line, Ltd., a British concern.

This development is significant for several reasons. First, it offers graphic evidence of the divisive and anticompetitive impact of the Arab boycott on American business. Second, it refutes the arguments of boycott apologists that the boycott is not hurting American business. Third, it shows the ability of foreign governments and their industries to resist the boycott pressures of the Arab States.

I hope my colleagues will keep this example in mind when voting on these crucial measures. I would also address their attention to the suplemental views to House Report 94–1469 on the Export Administration Act extension where I set forth at greater length the adverse impact of the boycott on American trade.

I also wish to draw my colleagues' attention to a recent colloquy in the Washington Post on the Ribicoff amendment. The debate took place between columnists Evans and Novak and Dave Brody, Antidefamation League Washington director. I feel it puts in better perspective the principal issue which is whether or not, in Mr. Brody's words, American businesses should be allowed to remain "pawns—of—the Arab countries in their war against Israel." The text of this exchange of views follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 4, 1976]

United States Law and the Arab Boycott

In their August 30 column on the Arab boycott, Messrs. Evans and Novak misconceive what is involved in the current congressional effort to put teeth into present law, which merely discourages American business from cooperating with the boycott without expressly forbidding such compliance. If the pending legislation is enacted, Arab countries would still be free to wage economic warfare against Israel. What they would not be free to do is to involve American business firms in that fight.

The Washington Post, which has called for strong anti-boycott legislation, made this distinction clear in an editorial of January 26 when it said that the trade boycott of Israel by the Arab states is their own business but they should not expect to enlist American firms to support that boycott. The pending legislaion would simply prevent American business firms from being made pawns by the Arab countries in their war against Israel. Enactment of the legislation would mean that American business firms would then be able to make decision as to whom they wish to trade with free from foreign pressures and economic coercion.

Since American policy opposes the boycott and discourages American business from participating in it, it makes no sense to confer special tax benefits on companies which comply with the boycott. By denying these tax benefits to companies which violate the anti-boycott policy, the Ribicoff amendment would make our tax laws an instrument to implement rather than frustrate that national policy.

Director of Washington Office
Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 30, 1976]

The Battle Over the Arab Boycott

(By Robert Evans and Robert Novak)

Ignoring warnings of a new Middle East crisis, Congress appears set on a collision course with the Ford administration by passing a new law to block any cooperation by U.S. business with the anti-Israel Arab boycott.

High administration officials who have been fighting an anti-boycott amendment to the tax-reform bill all this year fear that its real objective is to satisfy Israel's growing concern over intimate commercial relationships now building between the U.S. and Arab states.

"Until the 1973 oil embargo, Israel had us all to themselves," one high official told us. "Now the Arabs are moving in and the Israelis don't like it."

Thus, Treasury Secretary William Simon recently testified on Capitol Hill that the administration has been under "pressure . . . to mount a confrontational attack on the Arab boycott." Such an attack would fail, he said; would "harden Arab attitudes"; and would reduce U.S. influence in seeking a Middle East settlement, endangering anti-boycott progress already made. That progress has come in the area of anti-Jewish religious discrimination, once a key part of the loosely-controlled Arab boycott.

But what Sen. Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut—and nearly 400 cosponsors in both House and Senate—wants is a change in tax laws denying tax and export benefits to U.S. companies doing business with Arab states under boycott conditions. Their target: Arab discrimination against Israel, an enemy state.

Such economic pressures would short-circuit American companies doing Arab business (at a 1975 rate of $5.5 billion in exports) and reroute it elsewhere.

The reason is that even though Egypt and Saudi Arabia are quietly reducing the impact of the 20-nation Arab League boycott against Israel, they perceive the Ribicoff amendment as blatantly anti-Arab, dictated by pro-Israel domestic politics. Worse, they regard it as highly irregular interference in their right to wage economic warfare against an enemy (Israel).

The fact that Israel's economic minister here, Ze'ev Sher, has lobbied for passage of the Ribicoff amendment and other anti-boycott legislation, top officials suspect, is evidence of the deep Israeli fear over tightening U.S. Arab economic links. Yet, the Israeli campaign claims a different rationale.

"Compliance with Arab boycott rules is illegal, both under international law and under domestic law, as well as immoral and contrary to U.S. tradition and policy," Sher told a February symposium in Austin, Tex. But at that same symposium, Andreas F. Lowenfeld, former deputy legal adviser in the State Department and now a New York University Law professor, disagreed.

The U.S. itself has been "the Olympic champion in imposing political trade controls," he said, almost always with the "cooperation of foreign nations." Indeed, the U.S. has used "many of the same devices used by the Arab League—questionnaires, certificates and blacklists."

Since Congress views the boycott through political not jurisdical eyes, such clinical testimony by an authority goes unnoticed and unwanted. Likewise, Treasury officials were stupefied when Ribicoff complained privately that two of his own aides were "lobbied" recently by a high Saudi Arabian official (Hisham Nazer, the minister of planning).

Compared to the lobbying against the Arab boycott now being conducted by the Israeli embassy and American-Jewish organizations (including a federal court suit by the American Jewish Congress to end U.S.-Saudi economic cooperation) Nazer's effort was invisible.

Ribicoff told us that if his amendment stays in the tax-reform bill, now in Senate-House conference, and becomes law, the Arabs will end their boycott, because the U.S. is "the only country" supplying "what they need."

But the Treasury officials who have encouraged the fantastic rise in U.S.-Arab trade since the 1973 Arab-Israeli war flatly disagree. A U.S. law forcing Arab countries to transact business with major suppliers of Israel, they predict, would have the opposite effect: transfer the multi-billion-dollar Arab business elsewhere, reducing the flow of petrodollars back into this country at a time when Arab oil is desperately needed.

"The Israelis want this legislation to cut the economic ties between the U.S. and the Arabs," one high official told us. "This is not a religious question of anti-Jewish discrimination but hardball politics." If that view is correct, passage of a tough anti-boycott law will move the U.S. toward yet another crisis in the Middle East.

HOW KY CURRY SPENDS HIS TIME

HON. ED JONES

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to share with my fellow colleagues an article that appeared in the Cumberland Presbyterian magazine about a great man dedicated to preaching the word of God throughout Tennessee. He is Brother Ky Curry, the former pastor of my church in Yorkville, Tenn.

Brother Curry has been throughout his career a dedicated preacher of Christianity. Even today, at the age of 78, he continues to carry on this work as associate pastor of a Winchester, Tenn., church. I think that the article that I would like to enter into the Record describes, better than I ever could, his unfailing devotion to his vocation as a minister of God.

I first came to know Brother Curry when he came out of retirement to take over the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Yorkville, of which I am a member. Since then, I have come to respect him even more and appreciate the great work that he does.

I would, then, like to enter into the Record, the following story taken from the August 1 edition of the Cumberland Presbyterian:

(By Charles E. Sons)

In the 30 years I have known Ky Curry I have come to respect him as I respect no other man. To me he is the father-image, one in whom I can confide my innermost secrets and come away feeling that "here is one who cares."

His parishioners and his friends are not determined by church lines, nor races, nor creeds. Rather "It's the giving and doing for somebody else. On that all life's splendor depends. And the joys of this life, when you sum them all up. . . . Are found in his many friends."

Ky Curry can make friends. He's been making friends a long time. He did in his early pastorates. He did as editor of The Cumberland Presbyterian, as pastor at Cowan, TN for a number of years and now, after retirement as associate pastor at the First Cumberland Church in Winchester.

Ministers who retire cannot be an effective associate pastor, unless they are ready to accept total commitment. They must forego many of the pleasures in life; they must be willing to sacrifice in the area of recompense and they must determine that wherein they were once total leader of the flock, they have now been retrograded to second in command.

I believe of all the inspired scripture that has been preserved for us, the following best sums up the life and teaching of Ky Curry . . . "Not that I complain of want; for I have learned, in whatever state I am, to be content. I know how to be abased, and I know how to abound; in any and all circumstances I have learned the secret of facing plenty and hunger, abundance and want. I can do all things in Him who strengthens me."

Ky and his wife Jo who has been his helpmate for 41 years, looked forward to retirement and finally when that golden hour arrived they left their Cowan (TN) pastorate of sixteen years to work his fields and tend his cattle on the family farm in Pembroke, Kentucky.

But a lifetime of rapping on doors and decorating a pulpit is not so easily set aside. He came out of retirement and accepted a call to the Yorkville (TN) church. Still the memories of rising mountains, clear streams, fertile lands and countless friends left in Franklin County haunted him.

Ky and Jo returned to Franklin County and accepted a position as associate pastor at the Winchester church. His compensation was so small, it hardly paid his car expenses. These were the days prior to Social Security's golden age of 72, but now at the age of 78 his compensation has grown. But in these years, his only complaint about a salary has been, "the church just can't afford to pay me this much."

The Rev. John Stammer Smith, pastor of the Winchester chruch, said "The work of the associate minister in this church has become a vital part of the total program. Ky supplements my work by carrying the greater part of the visitation. He makes initial contact with newcomers in our community. He does most of the routine visitation and he is constantly alerting me to situations which need my attention. He is also available at any time, if I should be out of town, to care for any emergency situation which might arise."

Brother Curry performs another vital work in the church, with the assistance of his wife, Jo, in keeping accurate attendance records of our membership. With these records he can alert the pastor to any member whose attendance record would indicate a loss of interest or concern.

"I consider one of his greatest values to me is his excellent advice when we have a particular problem. I do not hesitate to ask his opinions and I value them very highly because of his vast knowledge and experience," Rev. Smith stated.

"In our situation there are no conflicts. This does not mean we always agree on every point, but we can sit down in the study and share with one another and reach an acceptable approach to almost any program or problem.

"I will always be grateful that I have been given the opportunity of working with and being so closely associated with Ky Curry. He is one of the greatest Christians I have ever known and my life has been enriched through this relationship."

Personalities and shared goals make for the congenial atmosphere that exists between pastor and associate pastor at the Winchester church. We can conceive of situations where there might be conflicts of personalities of participants in the same program in other churches. There could be jealousies which could arise, but there do not exist in the Winchester program.

As a farm boy called to serve his country during World War I, Ky Curry had implanted on his mind, while serving aboard a battle ship, the letters "PC," and he knew that they did not mean "plow corn," but rather "Preach Christ." It became, he said, "A very personal and a very real confrontation with God."

He left the military service and commenced, with untiring zeal, the mountainous task of acquiring an education, "enrolling" as he recalls, "as a freshman in high school with mere kids."

After high school came college and seminary work. He received degrees in both fields.

He worked his way through both and it took its toll. He said, "All of my life I had heard preachers laughed at for seemingly holding out their hands for a handout, so I determined to pay my own way at whatever personal cost to stay out of that category. It is still a matter of fierce pride to me that I did pay my way totally, even though the church had a preacher-boy fund to see young ministers through school. It has always been a matter of deep satisfaction that I have been able to maintain that way of life in my church work, never getting in the class of 'preacher-begging.' "

He financed himself through school as a barber and as a staff writer on a daily paper. He served as editor for a brief time of a weekly paper and for ten years—1937 to 1948—was editor of Sunday School publications and THE CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

Ky Curry has had few pastorates, for he has remained for lengthy stays at each. Of his work as a pastor he states, "I have always tried to work my field thoroughly. I firmly believe that there is no such thing as a church that cannot grow if the field is worked. However I never achieved anything spectacular, nevertheless, there was always some growth."

Brother Curry recalls only one situation in which he believed himself to be a misfit and he removed himself after only a few months.

Ky Curry has only two tried and proved methods. First, he surveys the field and then works it thoroughly, determining who in the neld is not being ministered to by other churches, and then extends to them the same kind of attention a pastor would extend to his own members. Second, is that of trying to do an honest day's work every day. He has never felt free to engage in any work away from his pastorate other than youth camps. He is of the firm belief that revivals rob his local church of his time which has already been purchased.

His greatest joy is pastoral work. As an associate he still tries to make over a hundred contacts each month. He is fully committed to the thought that a pastor learns more definitely the lives and needs of his people by being in their homes, talking to and listening to them about their total lives. Whatever one's general attitude toward people, a pastor learns to understand, love, and help his people through this method more than any other that has ever been worked by the ministry. One truly learns to be happy with, and to sorrow with people only through this method.

And finally, the people sense it and learn to live in the warmth of this kind of reach. They find a friend who cares.

The 78-year-old youthful associate minister declared, "And now I look back on life as a minister. Nothing outstanding has ever been accredited to me, although it was through this kind of ministry that my church honored me with a DD degree a few years ago. Yet, I feel that I have touched meaningfully lives that have been committed to me through my pastorates. It is the way I have tried to be honest with my Lord and give him an honest day's work every day of my life."

BEWARE MISGUIDED EULOGIES

HON. GENE SNYDER

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, for the next few weeks we will probably be subjected to the misguided rhetoric of praise eulogizing the founder and guiding light of Communist China. We will be told of the great leadership and statesmanship he provided the world and his nation.

Before these outrageous phrases begin assailing our ears and commonsense, I would like to remind you of the accomplishments of the man named Mao.

Mai Tse-tung guided the Communist Party to total power in 1949 and in one fell swoop enslaved nearly one-fifth of the world's population. Under his guidance, the Red Chinese have exported revolution to nearly every corner of Asia and supported outright aggression in Korea and Vietnam. In his three decades as titular head of the Communists, he has proven to be master of every nuance of trickery, deceit, and treachery to sustain the stranglehold of communism on his countrymen.

The subjugation of nearly 1 billion people, the deaths of U.S. soldiers in Korea and Vietnam and a full life of ruthless treachery—these are the accomplishments of Mao.

It is generally considered best not to speak ill of the dead. This case is an exception. Mao Tse-tung deserves to be remembered and if you remember his accomplishments, only "ill" can be spoken.

SCHEUER/KOCH PROGRAM TO END THE ARAB BOYCOTT

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, September 11, Congressman EDWARD I. KOCH called on Presidential candidates Gov. Jimmy Carter and President Gerald Ford to endorse a four-point program to effectively end American complicity in the Arab economic boycott.

On successive days this past week both Governor Carter and President Ford went before the national convention of B'nai B'rith in Washington to declare their opposition to the Arab economic boycott. The administration's record of nonfeasance and malfeasance shows that legislative action is necessary.

First, Congress must enact title I of the Scheuer/Koch anti-boycott bill which would make it illegal for any company trading with a foreign nation to disclose the race, color, religion, sex, nationality or national origin of an employee or a member of the board of directors pursuant to a boycott request, or to refuse to do business with any other domestic concern or person pursuant to an agreement or request of a foreign agent or nation. This proposal, already passed by the Senate on August 27, has been adopted in modified form by the International Relations Committee by a 27 to 1 vote last week and awaits action by the House of Representatives.

Second, we call for the organization of an inter-agency task force on the Arab boycott including top officials from the Securities and Exchange Commission to investigate bureaucratic barriers to effective implementation of anti-boycott policy and to recommend legislative or procedural changes in the reporting requirements and in the gathering, storage, retrieval and analysis of information, the poor quality of which for the last decade have undermined vigorous implementation of anti-boycott policy.

Third, we call upon the Commerce Department to make public the names of those firms complying with boycott requests. There is no reason why a firm which flouts our national policy should be protected by a cloak of secrecy by the Commerce Department. Such a company's stockholders, its distributors, its employees, its customers, and above all, the American public, all have the right to know that the company is ignoring our national policy, and to act accordingly.

And fourth, we call upon all Americans to join in an affirmative action program which would reward those companies which have stood up tall and strong in their opposition to the boycott and as a result found themselves on the blacklist. We urge the public to use moral dollars to fight Arab petro-dollars, by purchasing products from companies which have demonstrated the corporate responsibility and integrity to resist the boycott. The following is a list of companies which have shown moral leadership and which should be encouraged by our moral dollars:

Motorola, Miles Laboratories (Alka Seltzer), M. Lowenstein (textiles), Paul Masson, Revlon, Whirlpool, Zenith.

This past Tuesday the House Commerce Committee released a report on the Arab economic boycott which indicates that during 1974 and 1975 at least $4.5 billion worth of U.S. sales and proposed sales to Arab countries were subject to boycott requests.

For the past 11 years the Commerce Department has failed to vigorously execute our foreign policy as expressed by the Congress and successive Presidents and Secretaries of State. The Commerce Department has also opposed every legislative attempt to strengthen our antiboycott stand. The report indicates that the Commerce Department, "at best, did a bare minimum to carry out the mandate of the foreign boycott provisions of the Export Administration Act" and "actually furthered the boycott by implicitly condoning activity declared against national policy," or overtly facilitated the boycott:

> Commerce Department forms on which companies receiving boycott requests were to report such actions contained language which stated that, while it was against United States policy for corporations to comply with boycott requests against nations friendly to the United States, it was not against U.S. law to do so, sending a clear signal that they didn't really mean it.
> These same forms made it optional for companies to declare whether they were or were not complying with boycott requests.
> The Commerce Department itself distributed to United States business firms Arab trade opportunities which required compliance with boycott provisions, and last March, Commerce Department officials met with American businessmen to discuss ways in which U.S. exporter firms could evade the reporting requirements of anti-boycott legislation, by setting up foreign subsidiaries, thus making the Commerce Department an active agent of the Arab boycott office.
> The Commerce Department's reporting system was so slipshod and inaccurate as to be misleading and to obfuscate the true effects of the boycott. Export forms were designed to make the compilation and computerization of data difficult, and analysis of thirty thousand reporting forms cumbersome.

The steps outlined above will not have a negative effect on Arab-American trade because the Arbs have repeatedly stated that they will not allow the boycott to interfere with their economic development. The report documents that since 1973, Arab trade with staunchly anti-boycott nations has increased substantially—Holland 83 percent, Sweden 93 percent, West Germany 100 percent and the United States 109 percent—while Arab trade with a nation like France which supinely acquiesces to boycott threats, increased by less than 50 percent.

EDITORIALS CALL PRESIDENT FORD'S PARK EXPANSION PROGRAM "11TH HOUR CONVERSION AND POLITICAL POSTURING"

HON. JOE L. EVINS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times, in a recent editorial entitled, "Discovering the Parks," points out that during the 2 years of President Ford's incumbency he has sharply cut and reduced the budget for the national park service of the Department of the Interior and that just before opening his campaign for election, he calls for expenditure of $1.5 billion for expansion of the national park system.

The Washington Post of September 1, 1976, carried a similar editorial entitled "Old Faithful Presidential Politics." Both are interesting.

These editorials from the New York Times and the Washington Post are included in the RECORD for the interest of my colleagues and the country.

DISCOVERING THE PARKS

Public opinion polls consistently report that conditions in the national parks—and conservation issues generally—are of concern to a wide spectrum of voters. It is not surprising, therefore, that as President Ford seeks to win election in his own right, he should manifest a sudden enthusiasm for the national parks.

The parks, including Yellowstone which Mr. Ford visited this week, have experienced the bad as well as the good effects of the tourism explosion. Overcrowding, crime, vandalism, polluted air—the very conditions that city people journey to the national parks to escape—have become common in the more accessible and better-known sections of the park system.

The National Park Service of the U.S. Department of the Interior in recent years has repeatedly petitioned the Office of Management and Budget and the White House for additional funds to cope with these new pressures. Unfortunately, neither the O.M.B. nor the White House has been responsive to these requests. In both of the budgets he has submitted, President Ford asked for substantially less money for staffing, maintenance and land acquisition than the Park Service has sought and than conservation organizations regarded as necessary.

In fiscal 1976, for example, the Park Service asked for $397 million, the President budgeted $304 million and Congress—over Administration objections—raised that figure to $312 million. Again, in the new fiscal year beginning October 1, the President asked for $337 million, substantially less than the Park Service had requested, and Congress raised it to $355 million.

The Fish and Wildlife Service has a special fund to buy wetlands for migratory birds. Last Year, Congress appropriated $7.5 million for the fund and this year $4 million. In both years, the Ford Administration asked that nothing be appropriated for this purpose.

Against this background the President's discovery that the parks and wildlife refuge system need additional money for land acquisition seems to have more to do with Mr. Ford's political needs than with the needs of the parks, which have not changed much since January when his last budget was submitted. The same is true of his decision that the understaffed Park Service requires 1,500 more employees now than he thought then.

President Ford initially generated confusion when he asserted that his recommendations would more than double" the number of acres in the parks and wildlife refuges: the sum he mentioned for land acquisition would fall far short of that target. Interior Department officials subsequently explained that Mr. Ford was merely referring to the 32 million acres in Alaska that have been reserved for parks and refuges under the Alaskan Native Claims Act of 1971 but not yet actually established. A program authorized five years ago hardly constitutes a new initiative. It is also unclear how the President relates his land acquisition program to the far more ambitious bill now nearing enactment in Congress.

An eleventh-hour conversion is better than none at all. But President Ford's pledge would carry more conviction had he shown by word and deed in the last two years that he really cared about national parks and wildlife refuges.

OLD FAITHFUL PRESIDENTIAL POLITICS

Out at Yellowstone National Park, Old Faithful erupted on schedule on Sunday—right in the middle of President Ford's speech proposing a 10-year, $1.5-billion "Bicentennial land heritage program." Mr. Ford no doubt viewed the geyser as a perfect prop, epitomizing all the natural treasures that he seeks to save. And that is certainly one image that could reasonably be evoked by Old Faithful on this occasion. It is, after all, splendid spectacle, beauteous to behold and well worth preserving in its natural state. But it is also vaporous and transitory, a spasmodic, passing thing of no great substance. And now that we have carefully studied the ingredients of the President's grand-sounding plan for the national parks, Old Faithful seems to us to have been the perfect prop for this occasion in a way quite different from that intended by the President's advancemen. For what, when you think about it, is older and more faithful than the time-honored tradition that impels candidates for President (and above all incumbent candidates) to spout campaign promises that dance in the sunlight and delight the multitudes—and then, predictably, evaporate into thin air? As it is with Old Faithful, so, alas, it is with the President's "new" aid program for the national parks: there may have been quite a lot of steam behind it for a brief moment or two, but the suggestion of substance is largely illusory. There is really not much there that hasn't been there all along, or that Mr. Ford couldn't have put there long before now.

So we think that in this case, at least, Jimmy Carter was entitled to let off a little steam of his own. Jody Powell, Mr. Carter's press secretary, interrupted a softball game in Plains to accuse the President of "a calculated election-year flip-flop" intended "to cover up eight years of Republican mismanagement of our nation's park system." There is considerable basis for this charge. The national parks and wildlife refuges have been sadly neglected for much of the past decade. Budgets have not kept pace with rising costs and great increases in public use. Established parks have been allowed to deteriorate for want of proper maintenance and care. New areas have been authorized but not fully acquired or adequately staffed. Although Congress must bear part of the responsibility for this, the major barrier has been the Office of Management and Budget, which has insisted on pinching pennies for several years—while allowing a billion-dollar backlog of park problems to build up.

Mr. Ford has indeed flip-flopped. His new attitude was first evident some months ago when, under growing pressure from Congress, he overrode OMB and insisted that the National Park Service's personnel ceilings be raised. His new proposals go much farther along the same constructive line: he wants more funds to carry out commitments that the federal government has already made. The $1.5 billion in supplemental funds would be spent over the next decade primarily to develop and rehabilitate existing parks and wildlife refuges, to provide more adequate staffing, and to buy some of the nearly half-million acres already designated for inclusion in various parks and refuges. The plan amounts to a declaration that the penny-pinching has to stop, and that a much larger, continuing investment must be made to protect these priceless resources against decay.

In theory, then, Mr. Ford's proposal is very sound. But in practice it is suspect in two ways. The first is timing: the plan comes very late for legislative purposes, however useful its proferring may be for the fall campaign. The second problem is the packaging. Besides attaching a superfluous and irrelevant "Bicentennial" label to the plan, the White House declared that it would "double America's heritage" of parks, refuges and historic sites. That suggests a vast expansion of acreague, a claim that is supported by the numbers only if you include almost 64 million acres in Alaska, which the administration proposed to set aside for parks and refuges almost three years ago. Such dubious arithmetic only detracts from the real merits of the new spending requests—and gives Mr. Carter another target. It also perpetuates the notion that expanding the store of parklands is more important than enhancing what we have. Doubling the acreage may sound more appealing. But the greater need is for a redoubling of efforts to safeguard and improve existing national preserves. Mr. Ford has now recognized that need, which is good news. It would have been much better news—and more persuasive, as well—if it had come to us in a proposal to Congress at the beginning of his two years in office, rather than in a strategy ceremony at the beginning of his presidential campaign.

HON. MICHAEL HARRINGTON

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my colleagues, I am inserting in the Record my August 26 testimony on two amendments I proposed be added to the special prosecutor bill. The first would make it a criminal offense for executive branch officials to make intentional false statements to the Congress. The second would prohibit reprisals against those Federal employees who furnish information to the Congress.

The full text of the testimony follows:

Testimony on Amendments by the Honorable Michael J. Harrington to the Special Prosecutor Bill, H.R. 4476 Before the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to appear before the subcommittee today and endorse both the form and the intent of the Special Prosecutor bill. I commend the chairman for introducing this title of the Watergate Reorganization and Reform Act into the House; H.R. 14476 is certainly a distinguished coda to a distinguished career in Congress, and an appropriate follow-up to your effort during the impeachment proceedings two years ago. I hope that this bill will win the rapid approval of our colleagues, and that we can also produce companion measures to the other, equally important titles of S. 495, providing legal counsel for the Congress and increased financial disclosure for the entire Federal government.

My specific purpose in coming here today, however, is to urge that the subcommittee install two new sections in H.R. 14476, each of which addresses the critical problem of government lying and deception in this country. The first section would create a new criminal offense—that of making official, intentional false statements to Congress. The second section would prohibit reprisals against those federal employees who furnish information to Congress.

What we really need is an Executive-Legislative relationship based upon openness and candor, and I admit that legislative proposals by themselves cannot bring this situation about. However, a long history of Executive deception and Legislative passivity requires that a means be created to discourage the prevailing tendency to coverup and mislead. Thus, it is my belief that these new sections I am proposing today would add substantial weight to the structural reforms contained in the bill. Indeed, these provisions may very well be prerequisites to an effective Divison of Government Crimes and Special Prosecutor because, as we have learned all too well these past ten years, false statements and secrecy forge the shield behind which government corruption and abuse of power occur. We must deter the potential liar and encourage the potential whistle-blower, or else most of the cases the new prosecutors should investigate will go unnoticed. The engine which H.R. 14476 constructs simply won't run without the fuel information provides.

I think most of us recognize by now the fundamental importance of reliable information to the operation of our government. We cannot have government by consent of the governed if we don't know what we are consenting to. Elected officials do not lead by misleading. As Walter Lippmann noted. "It is sophistry to pretend that in a free country a man has some sort of inalienable or Constitutional right to deceive his fellow men." After a generation of Executive sophistry, after Vietnam, Watergate, and the CIA, this nation and the Congress deserve and demand the truth from its public servants. And I do not think it is far-fetched to assume that if the American people do not get the truth—or if they believe they're not getting the truth—then our experiment in democratic rule will soon come to an end.

My proposal is based on this fundamental principle. It is also predicated on the belief that there exists a special, Constitutional responsibility on the part of federal officials or employees to provide accurate information when they appear before Congress. Clearly, the legislative branch cannot perform the duties assigned to it by Article I of the Constitution when it is deceived by the Executive branch. It cannot advise and consent on Presidential appointments, or oversee the agencies and programs it has devised, or design new laws to meet the needs of the American people unless it receives the facts, and the Executive branch remains the primary source for most of those facts. Lying, deception, and silence subvert the separation of powers doctrine, a cornerstone of our republic, by concentrating power in the hands of those who know more than their intended equals under the tripartite system. Unchecked, arbitrary power short-circuits the democratic process.

It should be obvious that the repercussions of secret Executive actions have ranged far beyond the abstract borders of democratic theory and constitutional law. We are continually learning about what one author calls the "underside" of our recent history: an almost unbroken trail of attempted assassinations, bribes, burglaries, wiretaps and even entire wars which have been perpetrated in the American people's name without their knowledge or consent. Let me briefly cite two examples from this history.

In 1973 Senator Symington asked CIA director Richard Helms if his organization had tried to overthrow the Allende Government, if any money had been passed to the Chilean President's opponents, and if any attempt had been made to prevent his original election in 1970. Helms answered no to all three questions.

Yet the 1975 Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report on covert action in Chile makes it unmistakably clear that Helms willfully deceived Senator Symington, his colleagues in Congress, and the public at large on this matter.

Lying to Congress and avoiding legal recrimination has benefitted Harry W. Shlaudeman, Deputy Chief of Mission in Chile at the time of the coup, in a more personal way. The only consequence he has suffered for giving me answers similar to those Helms gave Symington is a promotion to Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs. We have thus sunk to the point where a public official actually reaps rewards for falsifying his account of serious misdeeds in which he participated to those charged with monitoring his actions.

The first section of my proposed amendment is aimed, therefore, at bringing a Helms or a Shlaudeman to justice and, like most criminal laws, at deterring future officials or employees from doing what they did. I am also seeking to achieve a better balance between the legislative and executive branches, and to restore a modicum of integrity to the national government as a whole. Since the stakes are high, the punishment is severe: five to ten years in prison. I regard the willful deception of Congress as a high crime, on a par with bribery or treason, and sufficient grounds for impeachment.

Prosecution for this crime should not be initiated easily, lest it become a tool for witchhunts and more subtle forms of harassment. Hence the class of potential offenders is limited to public officials and employees of the United States, those citizens who bear the extra responsibilities associated with the privileges of public power. The range of statements covered by this provision has been narrowed in two ways. First, the matter to which the statement relates must have been learned in the course of one's official duties, and second, such statement must bear the potential to affect the course or outcome of the Congressional proceeding at which it was made. These materiality tests, I believe will screen out trivial and personal matters from the purview of the statute.

The false statement offense includes a third test for prosecution, that the accused know, at the time the remark was made, of its falsity. This forestalls the possibility of prosecution if the witness or speaker is innocently confused or ambiguous. One should not have to be convinced of a statement's veracity before being allowed to express it before Congress, for opinion and speculation are invaluable aspects of the free exchange of ideas so essential to our political process. Indeed, it is with an eye toward preserving discourse to the fullest extent possible that the proposed statute cannot apply to press statements, interviews, conferences or other public appearances. The First Amendment welcomes rhetoric and hyperbole; to try and constrain free speech would be as unconscionable as it would be impractical. I should think, however, that opinion posing as fact could conceivably be termed a lie under the proposed statute if the person delivering it did so intentionally.

I have excluded one common requirement for prosecution from this section, namely, that the false statement be given under oath. The existing perjury laws, to be candid, have shown themselves insufficient to the task at hand. Furthermore, not all congressional bodies possess the power of subpoena or care to utilize it. If a civil servant doctors statistics in a written report to the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, or if the President of the United States does the same in a State of the Union address, Congress has been deliberately misled, and I can find no rationale to condone it.

The two most popular defenses of the right to lie revolve about the need to keep national security secrets, or pressure from a superior where one's job is at stake. Neither defense, in my view, outweighs the necessary and proper clause of the Constitution. Secrecy, on the rare occasion when it is justifiable, can be maintained by invoking the Fifth Amendment or in executive session. Obeying a superior's order is similarly inadequate; while lying to Congress does not approach the Nuremberg crimes in magnitude, the principle still holds. Yet I do recognize the intricate circumstances that can develop in such a situation, and this brings me to the second section of my proposal.

I shall only highlight the whistle-blowing portion of my amendment because it seems self-explanatory. It might well have been entitled the "Ernie Fitzgerald law," after the Air Force official who lost his job after he exposed the huge cost overruns of the C-5A project. A future Fitzgerald should be allowed another option besides submission or resignation in protest, and my proposal would enable him or her to recover relief in civil court at any time. Moreover, if such civil action were instituted within one year of the informaton disclosure, the burden would be on the superior to demonstrate that the adverse action was taken for a different reason. This law would only apply to those in the competitive service, as Members of Congress retain a legally sanctioned discretionary power over their employees.

I am sure the subcommittee will give these proposals the most serious consideration and I look forward to their further refinement. While I admit that legislation is in no way sufficient to deal with the problem of Executive branch misrepresentation of the facts before Congress, I believe the proposed amendments represent a long overdue first-step in addressing the problem of Executive deception.

HOME HEALTH CARE STANDARDS

HON. WILLIAM S. COHEN

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1976

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation with cosponsors to develop a set of standards which will insure quality care and utilization control in the home health programs of the Federal Government.

Few would now dispute the necessity or the desirability of home health services. However, Congress and the administration have been reluctant to make these services available without assurance that the public dollars needed to support such care would be well-spent. My bill, unlike other home health legislation, addresses this problem from a comprehensive and positive approach—one that sets standards for quality care before these services are liberalized and the Government is forced to intervene in the crisis situations characterized by recent instances of fraud and abuse within the nursing home industry and other Federal health care programs.

The need for this legislation is best illustrated by reviewing the home health market as it now exists. Home health care, as an alternative to institutional care, is necessary if we are to provide for the full range of the elderly's health care needs. With the dramatic rise in medical care prices over the last few years, alternative mechanisms of health care delivery have been investigated. GAO recently completed a review of 20 studies dealing with the cost of home care, and 19 of those studies presented data which supports the proposition that home health care is less expensive at lower levels of impairment than institutionalization.

The cost of this unnecessary care for our elderly citizens is not only enormous in dollars and cents, but it is even more devastating to the dignity and mental well-being of the patients themselves. As a member of the House Select Committee on Aging, I have participated in hearings where elderly citizens have made it quite clear that they would prefer to remain in their own homes. Yet studies by experts indicate that between 15 percent and 40 percent of the Nation's 1 million nursing home patients remain institutionalized because of the lack of alternative forms of care. In addition, one out of six older Americans who are not in institutions need direct social and health services to manage their own affairs within their own homes and communities. In short, the provision of medical/social services designed to help elderly patients remain independent in their own homes fulfills the urgent wishes of older people themselves and is less expensive than nursing home care.

Despite the vast evidence of need, however, current policies have restricted the availability of Federal home health benefits. For example, individuals who are otherwise eligible for Federal health care assistance qualify for these services only if they have been hospitalized prior to receiving the benefits and only if they still require acute care. In any event, the patient is limited to just 100 such home visits. These barriers encourage the overuse of institutional care. In addition, many providers of home health services have been arbitrarily prevented from even participating in Federal home health programs on the basis of provider sponsorship rather than the quality of service they offer. Clearly, present controls are misdirected both in terms of patient need and suitable care. No wonder home health care accounts for less than 1 percent of Federal long-term care expenditures.

In order to assure access to home health care, it is necessary to provide appropriate incentives to encourage its growth and development. As I have indicated, there are at present many bills pending which would remove the present restrictions on the availability of home health benefits. Likewise, HEW has issued regulations freeing up some home health services under the medicaid program. Nevertheless, greater stimulation of the home health industry will not necessarily provide better care if we fail at the same time to provide a standard to identify agencies with programs that warrant public and professional confidence and to encourage those agencies to go beyond the basic standards to higher levels of excellence.

My bill accomplishes this task by creating a special commission on quality assurance and utilization control in home health care composed of individuals familiar with home health programs, both as providers and consumers; individuals familiar with the processes of accreditation; and State and Federal representatives. In addition, the commission would have the availability of whatever other expert testimony deemed necessary to insure that all interested parties are represented.

The Commission would have 1 year to conduct a full study of the present issues relating to quality care including training requirement of providers, methods of peer review, establishment of patent ombudsmen, proficiency testing of providers, the need for onsite review or certificates of need, eligibility requirements for recipients, Federal and State roles as a part of the broader home health care delivery system, the scope of benefits, and enforcement. Similar commissions have worked in the past such as the Bioethical Commission on Human Subjects, the National Fire Protection Association, and the Federal Panel on Early Childhood. The legislation further provides a procedure whereby the recommendations of the Commission will speedily come into force unless they are disapproved by either house of Congress.

This legislation, as a forerunner to the sorely needed legislation to expand these necessary services, is an essential step in the evolution of a more uniform, coordinated, and rational approach to the Federal financing of home health care. If the Government uses tax funds to encourage a system of home health care, it clearly has the responsibility to provide adequate regulation of the delivery system according to a set of stated, enforceable standards.

At this point, I am inserting a section-by-section analysis of my bill, H.R. 15257, prepared by the Congressional Research Service for the benefit of my colleagues.

ANALYSIS

Section 1: This section would amend the Medicare program (Title 18 of the Social Security Act), the Medicaid program (Title 19 of the Social Security Act), and the program of Grants to States for Social Services (Title 20 of the Social Security Act) to make all home health agencies participating under these programs and all home health services provided under these programs subject to any new and additional regulations issued by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare which result from the plan and recommendations of the Commission on Quality Assurance and Utilization Control in Home Health Care established by H.R. 15257.

Section 2(a). This section amends Part C of Title 18 of the Social Security Act by adding a new section 1880, entitled "Special Commission on Quality Assurance and Utilization Control in Home Health Care."

Section 2(a)—new subsection 1880(a). This subsection establishes a new commission which is to be known as the "Special Commission on Quality Assurance and Utilization Control in Home Health Care," under the Medicare program.

Section 2(a)—new subsection 1880(b). This subsection sets forth the membership of the Commission. The Commission is to consist of 17 members appointed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. Five members are to be representatives of professional groups with expertise in accredition; while three must be recipients of benefits under Title 18, 19, or 20 of the Social Security Act. The remaining nine must include a representative of the Federal Council on Aging, a physician with home health care experience, a third-part payor participating in the Medicare program, a nurse practitioner with home health care experience, a homemaker-home health aide, a physician therapist with home health care experience, a representative of a State survey agency, a nutritionist, and a social worker with experience in home health care. One member of the Commission will be designated as chairman by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with the advice and consent of the Senate.

This subsection also sets forth procedural rules for the Commission and provides for compensation and travel expenses for Commission members.

Section 2(a)—new subsection 1880(c). This subsection sets forth the functions and duties of the Commission. The Commission is required to study, investigate and review home health care and services provided in the United States by those home health agencies qualified to participate in the programs authorized under Titles 18, 19, or 20 of the Social Security Act, as well as those home health agencies not qualified to participate in these programs. The Commission's study, investigation, and review is to determine:

(A) the need for additional quality assurance and utilization control for home health care and services, and

(B) the manner in which current standards, conditions, and requirements of home health care programs under Titles 18, 19, and 20 of the Social Security Act should be modified in order to provide such additional quality assurance and control, including (but not limited to) those standards, conditions and requirements for (i) training home health providers, (ii) methods of peer review, (iii) methods of utilization control, (iv) methods for evaluation of care by recipients, (v) proficiency testing of home health providers, (vi) on-site review of home health agencies, (vii) certificates of need, (viii) Federal and State arrangements regarding certification, licensure, and enforcement, (ix) recipient eligibilty requirements, and (x) scope of benefits.

This subsection also requires the Commission to develop a detailed plan for home health care quality assurance and utilization control based on the results of its study, investigation, and review.

Section 2(a)—new subsection 1880(d). This subsection requires the Commission to submit a report to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Congress within one year after the majority of the members of the Commission are appointed. The report is to contain the plan developed by the Commission under subsection 1880 (c), as well as any related recommendations the Commission might have. The plan must incorporate the modifications to be made with respect to current home health care standards, conditions, and requirements under Titles 18, 19, and 20 of the Social Security Act, and cannot include any limitation based on sponsorship.

This subsection also requires the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, within 90 days after he has received the Commission's plan, to:

(A) issue regulations, as may be necessary, implementing the Commission's plan and carrying out the Commission's recommendations, as long as the plan and recommendations are not in conflict with existing law, and

(B) submit to the appropriate Congressional Committees any of the Commission's recommendations which would require changes in existing law.
